Test of lighting systems planned

Two sets of streetlights are being installed in the Surrey Ridge subdivision of Arlington Heights to test resident reaction to various street lighting systems.

Two test streets have been set up within the subdivision to simulate lighting conditions under mercury-vapor and sodium-vapor lighting. Both systems will use newly designed flat-bottom reflectors which reduce glare and concentrate light on the street.

Sodium-vapor (yellow) lighting will be installed along Princeton Avenue between White Oak Street and Kennicott Drive. The mercury-vapor (white) lighting will be installed along Harvard Avenue between the same streets.

YELLOW SODIUM-vapor lights such as this one at the corner of Noyes Street and Princeton Avenue have been erected on a two-block stretch of Princeton Avenue to test residents' reaction to the color and intensity of the lights.

THE TEST was approved by the village board as a means of determining public opinion. The board put a moratorium on the installation of any more sodium-vapor streetlights after residents objected to plans to put the lights in throughout Arlington Heights.

A sodium-vapor streetlight plan for the Scarsdale subdivision angered residents last winter. The village board rejected the bids for the project in January.

Sodium-vapor streetlights are supported by the village administration which contends they are cheaper to buy and operate than conventional mercury-vapor lights.

Although the lighting systems have been tested in various areas within Arlington Heights before, William Bachem, village electrical engineer, said the current installation would be the first attempt to "get the total effect of each type of lighting." He said past testing had been made with four different systems on an isolated-light basis.

Bachem said residents will be asked to respond on both their color preference and the difference in output between the flat-bottom and the present round reflector systems. The current test area was chosen, he said, because the curved design of the streets makes it possible to view the effects of the lighting without interference from lights on other streets.

THE COST FOR the various installations will range from $1,100 for seven units of the sodium-vapor lights to $1,600 for nine units of the mercury-vapor lights.

Bachem said the lights will be given a 120-day testing period, as requested by the village board.

However, the sodium-vapor lights are not new to the village. The first sodium-vapor lights were installed in 1968 at Euclid Avenue and Northwest Highway when traffic signals at that intersection were modernized, Bachem said.

RAVENSWOOD Airport was shut down in 1962, but Abe Marmel continues to run his used airplane parts business from the former flight office and hangars at 320 W. Touhy Ave., Elk Grove Township. Abe and his wife, Shirley, sell used parts salvaged from airplane wrecks.

Old airports never die

They just change into used-airplane parts stores with prices on old luggage tags and hangars made into salesrooms

by STEVE FORSYTH

The sunny afternoon at Ravenswood Airport, Ele. 650 ft., was perfect for Abe Marmel's task — washing down old airplane parts to be sold at the annual Oshkosh Air show.

There are those who would say the old airfield on Touhy Avenue between Elk Grove Village and Des Plaines doesn't exist anymore.

But look into the bespectacled eyes of Abe, the owner, and try to deny the existence of the soft, grassy strips that used to welcome hundreds of student pilots back to earth.

It matters not that the geometric patterns of the runways are now overgrown with thick weeds that nod their tangled, tousled heads at the bellies of the fat jets straining for altitude overhead. It matters not that the City of Chicago converted the old hangar area into a training center for its police dogs, moved the hangars and bought most of the 40-acre airport as a safety zone for the approach to runway 14-L at mighty O'Hare Airport.

RAVENSWOOD AIRPORT will live as long as Abe and his wife Shirley continue to run their business in dark, dusty hangars and a cluttered little office at 320 W. Touhy Ave.

Abe is past 70 but conceals his age well as he scuttles around, lugging airplane parts from one place to another on the almost deserted grounds.

He does not conceal the traces of bitterness he feels toward the city, which condemned his tiny, struggling airport in 1962 because jet pilots complained of the small planes flying near O'Hare. A high chain-link fence separates the 10 acres that are still Abe's from the overgrown thickets now owned by Chicago.

AVIATION IS Abe's life. He took lessons in 1939 at Ravenswood and eight years later bought the airport from the owner, who was a close friend. He was an airplane dealer as well as head of the popular flying school.

"Former students still drop in," Abe says. "We really had a nice relationship. By the same token, we had very good discipline."

RAVENSWOOD was safe for the pilots who trained there in numbers up to 200 at a time. "We never had any student get hurt," Abe says.

Ravenswood must also live on in the minds of the pilots who pay infrequent visits to their former mentor. They probably remember that Abe would allow no show-offs, and someone who didn't like the rules was invited to do his flying elsewhere. Abe doesn't live in yesterdays, although he surrounds himself with mementos of busier years.

His used parts business gets him by these days, and he gives himself and Shirley a three-month winter rest in the South each year. "I don't want to be tied down," he says. "I would to work when I feel like working."

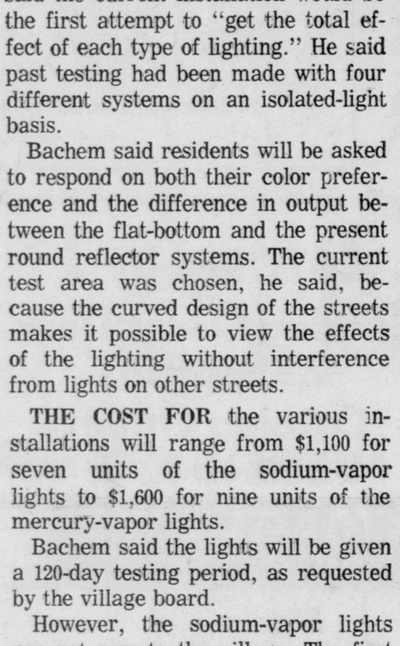

Abe says he is probably one of only 15 or 20 used airplane

Voters may change Harper's direction

Harper: ten years later

EDITOR'S NOTE: Ten years after the founding of Harper the college growth has exceeded all projections. A look at the future is provided in this last in a series on the college's 10 years of life.

by WANDALYN RICE

The future of Harper College rests for the most part on the decision of the voters and the direction of higher education in the United States.

The voters are being asked to decide whether Harper College, Palatine, will go the direction of community colleges in Florida, California and Oregon by buying land for a second site for the college.

The college board of trustees has picked out the site — 112 acres at the corner of Palatine and Schoenbeck roads, Arlington Heights.

On Sept. 27 voters will be asked to approve a $12 million bond issue which will include funds for completion of the present Harper campus and purchase and construction on the second Harper campus.

THE COLLEGE is basing its justification for the second campus on enrollment projections done by Real Estate Research Corp. in 1973.

So far the projections of enrollment growth have been remarkably accurate, with the rate of enrollment growth taking one unexpected dip during the 1973-74 school year, but exceeding expectations last year.

Even so, college officials are hedging their bets on the move to the second campus. The college does not plan to sell the bonds which will pay for building on the second site until 1977 and have said they will not start building as scheduled in 1980 unless the enrollment justifies it.

The purpose of the referendum now, college officials say, is to make sure the land is purchased and set aside, ready for the day it will be needed.

College Pres. Robert Lahti admits that many voters are skeptical of the idea of a second campus and mistrustful of okaying something that might not be needed.

'The people you talk to directly generally end up agreeing that it is very logical to plan for the site now," he says. "Those who haven't heard the rationale are very negative. In a way that is similar to the reaction people had to the idea of the college in the beginning. They had many misconceptions."

THE DECISION on the second campus, whichever way it goes, will not be the only factor which will shape Harper's future. Other factors include the wishes of faculty, administration and board members and nationwide trends.

One thing Harper will never be, unless state law changes, is a four-year college, even though many persons would like that. James Hamill, a member of the original Harper board who retired in 1971, says, "I'd like to see it become a four year college even though it can't be done under existing law. Since it can't do that, I'd like to see it allied with a four year college and graduate school. The area really needs that."

EVEN THOSE who do not like the idea of Harper turning into a four-year school like the idea of an alliance with 4-year schools. The college has already set up cooperative programs with Elmhurst College and Northern Illinois University which allow students to receive bachelor's and master's degrees in business on the Harper campus. More such programs may be developed.

The new catchword at Harper is the "educational cafeteria," a school offering all sorts of things to all kinds of students. Cooperative programs with four year schools mesh well with that concept.

Robert Powell, president of the Harper faculty senate, expresses the "cafeteria" concept. "In the past, two

Stadium bond cost may hit $35 million

The proposed stadium at Arlington Park Race Track will call for a revenue bond issue in the range of $35 million, according to new figures released this week by Madison Square Garden Corp. Total cost of the stadium alone would be $26.937 million, with legal, accounting and printing fees, plus interest payments during the two-year construction period adding to the project costs. The $35 million figure is based on an 8 per cent interest rate on the bonds. Stuart B. Freeman, Madison Square Garden's senior vice president for finance and administration, says the cost would be more than $41 million at 11 per cent interest.

More apartments for Wheeling?

W. Strong Street area residents, who say they were betrayed when a compromise agreement was reached with the Wheeling Village Board to permit construction of 244 apartments in their neighborhood by developer Victor Smigel could end up with even more apartments. The agreement, a court consent decree, permits Smigel to build 228 six-unit apartments, 16 townhouses and two single-family houses. Another provision in the agreement allows Smigel to buy other lots in the W. Strong Street area and guarantees him similar apartment zoning until Sept. 30.

Victims of bear attack better

Officials at Cardston Municipal Hospital, Cardston, Alta., Canada, Friday reported that three members of a Des Plaines family, who were mauled by a bear Thursday while hiking in Montana's Glacier National Park, were "doing fine." The exact conditions of Harold Peterson, 37, his daughter, Karen, 11, and son Seth, 7, have not been released by the hospital. The family apparently startled the 250-to-300-pound grizzly bear while hiking. A search for the animal has been unsuccessful.

Would pose challenge to Thompson

Dixon leads Walker in voter poll

by BOB LAHEY

Boosters of State Treasurer Alan J. Dixon as a Democratic candidate for governor were buoyed this week by a private poll showing Dixon as the favorite of Democratic voters in the Chicago metropolitan area, and a surprising threat to the probable Republican nominee.

In the normally Republican area of suburban Cook County and the five "collar counties," the poll showed Dixon comfortably ahead of incumbent Gov. Daniel Walker in a primary contest, and within 4 per cent of Republican James R. Thompson, the likely Republican nominee.

Friends of Dixon reported that he polled 45 per cent of all voters asked their preference in a Democratic primary, to Walker's 29 per cent. In a choice between Walker and Lt. Gov. Neil Hartigan, the respondents gave Hartigan 43 per cent and Walker 33.

DIXON'S SUPPORTERS declined to reveal figures concerning Sec. of State Michael J. Howlett, in deference to Howlett's insistence that he will not consider becoming a candidate for governor. However, Howlett ran slightly behind Dixon in the poll.

Asked to choose between Thompson and Dixon, 35 per cent picked Thompson and 31 per cent, Dixon. In contrast, 55 per cent picked Thompson, to 25 per cent for Walker in the six-county area.

The poll was conducted in suburban Cook County, and the counties of Du Page, Lake, Kane, McHenry and Will during a two-week period beginning a week after Thompson's emergence as a Republican candidate.

Dixon's chances for a primary victory over Walker appeared even better, in the private poll, among those who declared themselves as likely to vote in the primary election. There he received a 23 per cent edge over Walker. The margin was slightly less among those who identified themselves both as Democrats and likely voters, but he still garnered a 19 per cent advantage in that category.

BUT THE MOST significant figure to Dixon's supporters appeared to be his showing against Thompson. With 34 per cent of the respondents being undecided, poll analysts project that Dixon might receive 48 per cent of the vote in the six-county area against Republican Thompson. Seldom have Democratic candidates received as much as 40 per cent in that area.

Both Dixon and Hartigan outpolled Walker in six categories presented by the poll, with one exception. Those classifying themselves as independents gave Walker an edge over Hartigan in a primary contest.

In the various categories, these are the margins the respondents gave Dixon and Hartigan in a contest with Walker:

- All voters: Dixon, plus 16 per cent; Hartigan, plus 10.
- Likely to vote: Dixon, plus 23 per cent; Hartigan, plus 20.
- Democrats likely to vote: Dixon, plus 19 per cent; Hartigan, plus 9.
- All Democrats: Dixon, plus 27 per cent; Hartigan, plus 17.
- Independents: Dixon, plus 2 per cent; Hartigan, minus 6.
- Republicans: Dixon, plus 32 per cent; Hartigan, plus 34.

Republican sentiment could be significant because voters will again be allowed to vote in the primary of either party without prior declaration of their affiliation. Unless the other Republican candidate, Richard H. Cooper, is able to mount a major challenge to Thompson, some Republicans may decide to take part in the Democratic primary.

Another phase of the poll showed Dixon to enjoy a better public image than either Walker or Hartigan.

Of those responding, 27 per cent rated Dixon as doing a good job in office; 32 per cent rated him "average" and only 1 per cent scored him "poor."

In contrast, only 13 per cent gave Walker a "good" rating; 46 per cent ranked him average; and 33 per cent considered his record poor.

Hartigan scored 18 per cent good, 38 per cent average, and 6 per cent poor.

Natural gas shortage seen this winter

by United Press International

Natural gas shortages this winter are expected to be 50 per cent worse than last season and could cause more unemployment because of factory closings, a White House spokesman said Friday.

Deputy Press Sec. William Greener told reporters that President Ford's energy and economic advisers estimate supplies will fall 15 per cent short of demands nationwide, compared to 10 per cent last winter.

The situation could be even worse in some areas, Greener said, particularly in Iowa, Missouri, Ohio, New Jersey, New York, North and South Carolina, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia.

Shortages in Ohio and Pennsylvania could be three times the nationwide rate, he said.

Greener reported on a two-hour White House meeting in which Ford's advisers gave him a preliminary report on the work of an interagency task force studying the gas shortage and what might be done to alleviate it.

"The President reviewed various administrative actions he could take to help "minimize the impact," Greener said, but "no final decisions were made." He could provide no details about options discussed at the meeting.

Another White House spokesman, John Carlson, said industrial users probably would be crippled first by a shortage and some factories might have to close, putting people out of work. Residential users would be the next to suffer, he said.

"It's very difficult to determine which industries will be hit first," Carlson said.

Ford repeatedly has called for deregulation of natural gas prices as an incentive to increased production. So far, Congress has shown little enthusiasm for the proposal.

The price of natural gas is limited to 52 cents per 1,000 cubic feet when sold across state lines. There are no controls on gas sold only in the state where it is produced.

It also was announced Friday that First National City Bank of New York raised its prime business loan rate ¼ point to 7¾ per cent, resuming the trend which has slowly increased it from a two-year low of 6¾ per cent July 3.

Interest rates have been moving upward since July as the Federal Reserve Bank, which regulates the nation's money supply, renewed its efforts to fight resurging inflation by deterring rapid expansion of the money supply.

In its weekly report Thursday the Fed indicated there had been virtually no growth in the money supply in July and there might actually have been a decline for the first time since the beginning of the year.

There have been predictions the prime rate will hold steady, or even decline, as the Fed picks a course calculated to moderate inflation without reinforcing recessionary influences. Lending weight to this is a declining loan demand by commercial and industrial borrowers.

The prime lending rate, a base rate from which other interest rates scale upward, does not immediately reflect in charges on consumer and small business loands.

Terrorists got asylum in Libya with 'pressure'

TRIPOLI, Libya (UPI) — Libya said Friday it accepted the Japanese Red Army terrorists who seized the U.S. Embassy in Malaysia and their colleagues only because of heavy pressure from Japan and Malaysia to let the 10 land.

The five-day drama that started when the guerrillas shot their way into the embassy Monday in Kuala Lumpur ended at the Tripoli airport when the Japan Air Lines DC8 landed with the terrorists, four volunteer hostages and the nine-man crew.

Windowless mini-ambulances sped the five guerrillas, one of them a woman, and the five Red Army members released from Japanese jails to Tripoli. Their destination was unknown.

The two Japanese government officials and two Malaysian government officials rested before making the return flight to Tokyo.

Libyan Communications Minister Nuri Feituri said the guerrillas handed over their weapons and surrendered "without resistance" when the plane landed and added:

"High level pressure from Japan and Malaysia caused our decision to accept these men. We did accept this because of the humanity point of view and we wanted to arrive safe."

NSA chief mum on mail snooping

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The director of the National Security Agency refused Friday to speak openly before a House intelligence committee about reports that the government intercepts communications by Americans with foreign countries.

Lt. Gen. Lew Allen Jr. refused to discuss the matter in open session of the House Select Committee on Intelligence, and the committee chairman said White House representatives told the investigative panel the matter involved "extremely sensitive information."

But before the committee went into a two-hour closed session, another NSA official said that the agency believed it was legal to intercept communications involving Americans with foreign countries without court permission.

Chairman Otis Pike, D-N.Y., said Allen had "responded more fully" in secret session but had maintained that the monitoring of telephone calls, cables and computer communications had stopped, as reported by the Rockefeller commission.

Allen warned that "unwise revelations" could undermine the United States position as a world power.

"Even small compromises in our interrelated protective and intelligence mechanisms make it possible for foreign governments to institute countermeasures that can dramatically reduce our effectiveness," he said.

"Indeed, this already has happened in several cases when unfortunate and unauthorized disclosures have been made with damaging effect."

He read a prepared statement in which he said the NSA, a Pentagon intelligence arm has two main purposes:

- Protecting U.S. communications from foreign intelligence exploitation.
- To exploit foreign communications to provide information to the U.S. government. The second, he said, is "uniquely vulnerable to compromise . . . the effects of unauthorized or unwise revelations concerning these operations are often very far reaching and prejudicial to our national interest."

O'Brien changes story on meeting Giacalone

DETROIT (UPI) — Gloom and a news blackout fell Friday night on the summer home of James R. Hoffa where his family is awaiting word of the former Teamsters president who disappeared nine days ago.

Hoffa's attorney son, James P., 31, kept reporters waiting two and a half hours for a scheduled news conference and then, looking downcast, declined to say anything.

Hoffa and his sister, Barbara Crancer, appeared buoyant Thursday as they kept their vigil with their ailing mother, Josephine. But late Friday the atmosphere obviously had changed.

The Detroit Free Press reported Charles L. "Chuckie" O'Brien, the man Hoffa called his other son, had changed his story about seeing Detroit Mafia kingpin Anthony "Tony Jack" Giacalone in the Southfield, Mich., Athletic Club in the early afternoon of July 30, the time the former Teamsters union president disappeared.

Giacalone was one of three men Hoffa had told family and friends he planned to meet at a fashionable Bloomfield Township restaurant.

O'Brien said at first he met Giacalone in Southfield at about the time his benefactor was seen, fuming for being stood up, in the parking lot of the Machus Red Fox Restaurant.

Officials of the athlecic club denied O'Brien was there, and the Free Press said an FBI source confirmed O'Brien had conceded as much during a three-hour grilling Wednesday.

Oddly enough, it was reported, O'Brien that day was driving a car owned by Giacalone's son, Joey, and told the FBI he was returning it to the family's Clair Shores, Mich., home during the critical hours.

But young Hoffa repeated his demands that O'Brien submit to a lie detector test.

In Belleville, Ill., a longtime Teamster leader said he did not believe the Mafia is connected with the disappearance of the labor leader because organized crime would not want the massive publicity.

"If they were going to get rid of anybody they would do it and get it over with. They wouldn't want publicity of this type," said Lester F. Baum, founder of Belleville Teamster Union Local 971.

The United States Friday called for international convention to ban safe haven for terrorists such as those seized and held hostage by Japanese terrorists in the U.S. Embassy in Kuala Lumpur this week.

Warning issued on aluminum wire

The Consumer Product Safety Commission Friday declared aluminum wire in use in perhaps two million American homes an "unreasonable risk" and directed that rules be drawn up to deal with the problem. It also set in motion machinery that could lead to an eventual replacement or refund for homeowners whose houses were equipped with the wire before 1971 when a different installation to lessen the risk of fire came into use.

Evidence handling 'inferior': Little witness

A criminologist Friday told the jury trying Joan Little for murder that handling of evidence at the scene of the crime was "very inferior." Dr. Herbert L. MacDonnell's testimony was part of a defense effort to discredit the circumstantial evidence on which the prosecution built its case. There were no witnesses to the killing of jailer Clarence Alligood, and Miss Little, charged with murdering him, says he tried to rape her.

Ask Andy

Rocks part of earth's ecology plan

Andy sends a complete 20-volume set of the Merit Students Encyclopedia to Bret Miller, age 10, of Tacoma, Wash., for his question:

HOW DO ROCKS TURN INTO SOIL?

This is a long story of the earth's sensible ecology systems. It is especially interesting at this time because it is directly related to the food problems of our hungry world. In fact, it is the basic key to our frantic famine situation. For our food depends on plants that feed us and the animals that provide our meat and dairy products. And the plants depend on healthy soil.

Powdered rock is a basic ingredient in the soil, but it is not the whole recipe. Soil is a balanced mixture of crumbled rocky minerals blended with the decaying wastes and remains of both plants and animals — living and dead. Finally this miraculous mixture of healthy soil is populated with bugs and grubs and wormy animals, plus a vast assortment of creatures too small to mention.

However, though all these other ingredients are necessary, the basic soil-making recipe does indeed begin with those powdery nonliving minerals. And these are taken from the sturdy nonliving rocks of the earth's crust. It is possible, as you probably know, to smash up some of the softer rocks with a hammer. But our patient planet uses other methods — on a global scale.

The sun, which causes the changing weather, also helps. So does the moon, which causes the tossing tides. So does the earth's mighty gravity, which drags great boulders down the mountains and makes the streams run down the slopes. So do the changing seasons, when summer heat and icy frost cause great rocky slabs to stretch and shrink and crack apart.

All these forces work together to weaken the rocky crust. Ice and heat create cracks; running water dissolves and washes away the rocky minerals. Step by step great slabs are broken into big boulders, and big boulders are smashed into pebbles and crumbly debris. Meantime, the rains and running rivers erode the fragments into powdery dust.

Here and there birds and other animals leave organic wastes which get mixed with the inorganic minerals. Finally the mixture is invaded by the mini dirt dwellers that turn the whole thing into living, healthy soil.

No wonder it takes the patient earth 100 years to build a one-inch layer of healthy soil. However, man can do the job much faster — if he copies earth's own basic recipe. This is why the care and rebuilding of soil is the sane solution to our food supplies.

Andy sends a 7-volume set of the Chronicles of Narnia to Loretta Sharp, age 11, of St. Catharines, Ont., Canada for her question:

HOW MANY DIFFERENT TREES ARE THERE?

One would think that old Andy could report a definite answer to this simple question. Not so. Nobody has made an accurate one-by-one count of all the tree species that belong to the earth. No, this is not one of those mysterious Top Secrets. True, there are a couple of believable excuses. But, let's face it, this important job has been neglected.

Naturally several renowned plant experts are willing to make estimates. These educated guesses ranged from 20,000 to 50,000. The most thoughtful estimate, in Andy's opinion, was 40,000. However, our plant experts really are geniuses, forever working to produce new and superior species. Hence, if we knew exactly how many tree species exist now, the number would have to be updated next year and each year thereafter.

Lincoln's voice; like a 'back country rube'

HOLLYWOOD (UPI) — What did Abraham Lincoln's voice sound like?

Was it deep and sonorous befitting his hallowed stature? Did it ring with the ardor of righteousness?

"Lincoln was a hick and he sounded like a back country rube," says Hal Holbrook, who has made a meticulous study of Lincoln biographies.

"Five words are used over and over again to describe Lincoln's voice — flat, nasal, high, shrill and unpleasant.

Holbrook has received letters criticizing his vocal interpretation of the great emancipator in the six one-hour "Sandburg's Lincoln" series, the fourth of which will be aired Sept. 3.

"People who write say I make Lincoln sound like a hick. That's what I intended," Holbrook said.

"He said 'set' instead of 'sit' and 'git' instead of 'get.' Carl Sandburg's books are a rich source of Lincoln's voice patterns and speech habits. Even better is Billy Herndon's book which described his voice in detail. Herndon was his law partner and saw greatness in Lincoln early in their relationship."

Holbrook, a Lincoln scholar himself, left as little as possible to chance in presenting a full portrait of the 16th president. He retraced Lincoln's migration route in the midwest during Abe's formative years.

"I lingered with my tape recorder in Gentryville, Ind., where Lincoln spent the longest period of time during his formative years — from age 8 to 20 — before moving on to Springfield.

"The people in Gentryville have a distinct dialect. They sound precisely as Lincoln's voice is described in the biographies," he said.

Parts keep airport alive

parts dealers in the country, but pilots who need him know where to find him.

HE GETS MOST of his parts from airplanes too badly wrecked to rebuild, although he complains that the supply is drying up as the years go by. Insurance companies usually advertise such planes, and the parts dealers bid on them, "but wrecks go for two or three times what they used to," he says.

Most of the customers now are local, but Abe still gets some mail-order business from previous connections. When he gets a request, he mentally checks his inventory, and supplies the part if he can.

"It's an interesting business. People need certain parts, and they're not always available," he says. "I know pretty well what I've got. I get a certain amount of pleasure in helping someone out."

As he rummages through his hangar full of wings, fuselage parts, doors and other assorted pieces, he notes, "These things are funny. They lay around for a long time, and all of a sudden there's a big demand." Old Piper Cub J-3 parts are particularly popular, and he has sold most of his.

He packs up a few hundred parts for the annual air show, marks a price on each one and lets the pilots come to him. Even the price tags are relics of a sort. They are written on the back of old Midway Airlines luggage tags that Abe purchased when the airline closed down about 1960. Midway used to operate a taxi service between O'Hare and Midway airports, he explains.

HIS PRICES are firm. "I don't bargain with anybody," he ways. "They can take it or leave it."

He says he still enjoys the business, although most of the property is rented to an earth-moving company. "If and when someone wants to buy, I'll sell out and move south," he admits.

He doesn't know when he will make that concession. Abe still takes his biennial physicals and keeps his pilot's license up to date, even though he sold his plane a few months ago. He says Shirley doesn't like him to fly anymore.

Who can say the Ravenswood Airport doesn't exist?

It is just as real as Abe; just as real as the rusted weathervane that still spins freely above the hangars. Just as real as yesterday.

Common house fly on Queen Ann's Lace.

For the life of a bug

Oh, what indignities they suffer, these insects of the summer heat. Vilified and assassinated, they pass through the summer months from birth to maturity to death or hibernation. They fill the hot afternoons with their rustlings, they are the companions of the long evenings as they search for light and food on the bright patios.

We hate them as they swarm about us, we slap at them and set lethal chemicals out to choke them.

Of course, they always endure these inequities as they have for millions of years — and each of them adapts generation upon generation to the life they must lead to survive. Moths fluttering through the summer nights, grasshoppers chomping on clover, flies cleaning up after larger creatures have gone, honey bees toiling in incomprehensible frenzy; they seem undisturbed by us and our ponderous ways.

You have to hurry when life is contained within a few weeks or months. There are no languid moments if you're stuck being a bug.

Housewife no stranger to school

by MARILYN McDONALD

Students in Wheeling-Buffalo Grove Dist. 21 have a real sympathizer on their board of education. She's been a student herself since 1963.

Barbara Farr, 48, newly-appointed board member, is just a few months away from receiving her Ph.D. in British history from the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle.

The long road to that degree and her future as a college professor began in 1963, when the Wheeling housewife resumed her postponed college education at Roosevelt University.

"I graduated from Arlington High School in 1944 and I wanted to go to college, but there just wasn't the money. So like so many girls my age, I got married and took a clerical job," Mrs. Farr said. "Then I settled down and had my son, and became active in club work. That was the big thing in the '50s."

WHILE SHE served as president of the Wheeling Junior Woman's Club in the late 1950s, Mrs. Farr was active in the formation of the Wheeling Park District and the Indian Trails Public Library District. Her club won a national Women's Club award for its outstanding community work in those years.

Mrs. Farr, however, never forgot her ambition to earn a college degree, and in 1963 she was able to begin school. "I guess I'm somewhat of a pioneer," she said, noting that many housewives now return to college to pursue postponed ambitions. "It's something I always wanted to do."

By 1967, Mrs. Farr had earned a bachelor's degree with honors from Roosevelt University, and an interest in history. "I decided to go on for my master's degree," she said. She enrolled at the University of Illinois, Chicago Circle, as one of its first master's candidates, and stayed on to begin her doctorate two years later.

MRS. FARR SAID her husband, William, manager of corporate design at Montgomery Ward, at first had to adjust to her burgeoning career interests. "But he's been very encouraging and supportive," she said.

Despite her busy schedule as a teaching assistant and dissertation writer, Mrs. Farr sought the Dist. 21 board seat resigned by Edwin Smith "because I thought I needed something in a little different direction. I think I can give the board a different perspective because I don't have any children in the schools."

"As an educator at the college level, I think it's very important what we do at the preparatory level," she said.

Can't ride on private property

Law passed to curb motorcyclists

The Village of Arlington Heights has passed an ordinance making it illegal for motorcyclists to ride on private property without written consent of the land owner.

The ordinance carries a maximum fine of $500.

Villlage Mgr. L. A. Hanson said there have been many complaints from residents about minibike and motorcycles riding over vacant land. The situation, Hanson said, "has gotten completely out of hand."

Two of the most popular areas for motorcycle riding are the southeast corner of Arlington Heights and Palatine road where a Robert Hall Villlage shopping center is planned, and behind St. Edna Church, 2535 N. Arlington Heights Rd.

The ordinance states: "It shall be unlawful for any person to operate motorcycles, minibikes, go-carts, snowmobiles and similar vehicles upon any unpaved private property without the written consent of the owner of the property."

Trustee Madeline Schroeder said motorcycle racing on vacant property has been a concern of residents who have talked to her.

Previously, the village had to wait for a complaint from the property owner before it could act to stop motorcyclists. With the new ordinance, Arlington Heights police will be able to act on their own initiative to curtail the riding.

Industrial-unit plan before panel

The village board's legal committee will get some expert advice Monday night on the proposed creation of an industrial development commission in Arlington Heights.

Arthur S. Replogle, president of the Oak Park Industrial Development Corp., will tell the committee about efforts to attract new business and industry in the western suburb.

Village administrators also have gathered information from Elk Grove Village, Evanston and the Skokie Valley Industrial Corp.

Trustee David Griffin, chairman of the legal committee, has proposed the creation of an industrial development commission to bring new industry to Arlington Heights.

Monday's meeting will start at 8 p.m. at the Municipal Building, 33 S. Arlington Heights Rd.

"REPRODUCTIONS are fine, fake is not," declares Edith Wilson as she warms up on her favorite subject — antiques. "When a reproduction is represented as authentic, then it is a fake." Mrs. Wilson is curator of the Mount Prospect Historical Museum emerging from an old brick school house.

Edith Wilson loves history

She's building a museum

by ELEANOR RIVES

Somewhere amid the packing cartons, the heaps of clothing, the newspapers and empty display cases in the red brick house in southwest Mount Prospect that originally was St. John Lutheran School is a hard-working, patient, dark-haired woman with a big plan and a small pocketbook.

Edith Wilson refers to the 100-year-old-plus building as "the little museum on Linneman Road." For the Mount Prospect Historical Society, not yet eight years old, it is the answer to a four-year search for an appropriate showcase in which to preserve local history.

Mrs. Rodney Wilson is curator of the embryo museum, a fitting role for one whose lifelong interest has been in the area of historical artifacts.

Her "big plan" is to have a grand opening July 4, 1976. Between now and that time, she must acquire and set up exhibits and displays representing the history of the Elk Grove-Wheeling Townships area.

AND THIS she must do on a shoestring or, better than that, for free. The Historical Society's budget is extremely limited.

"I would like to be in touch with all the families who have deep roots in this area," she said. "I realize most people want to keep treasured family objects, and that's as it should be. But if they are willing to part with anything, we certainly would appreciate it. On display, we would credit the donor."

Part of the plan is to restore the building as a little schoolhouse of the early 1900s, complete with old desks, ink bottles, report cards, textbooks and the like. Old editions of newspapers, old toys, clippings, photographs, maps, pictures, albums and old-fashioned clothing are also needed, not just from the early 1900s but from other periods in history.

"EVERYTHING from the past is important to us," said Edith. "If you give it to us, we'll find a place for it." Donors may contact her at 392-1844.

The Wilsons have a talent for finding places for objects from the past and a way of making them an integral part of the present. Their home embraces hundreds of antique treasures and collectibles — objects that don't just stand there — they do something.

The Hitchcock "Mammy Bench" is meant to be sat on and rocked, the huge oak rolltop desk is used daily, no drawer or pigeonhole empty. The Wilsons not only display their old coffee grinder — they grind coffee in it — and they do it because that's the way they like it.

They don't just admire the molds hanging on their walls — they make candles and animal-shaped cakes, molded ice cream and marzipan candy. Their refinished pie-safe in the living room provides storage shelves for books; their old trunk is a blanket chest.

Basil is drying in an antique wooden sieve. Old canning jars hold lentils, beans, marjoram, thyme and parsley. Rose petals are "seasoning" in a primitive wood bowl, later to be made into a potpourri.

MANY A GIRL Scout and Boy Scout troop, a junior high school class or 4-H club have toured the house and sensed the Wilsons' exhilaration over antiques, particularly in the "touch" room where many hand-wrought iron pieces may be handled.

Edith began collecting at age 12 and still displays her first purchase, a pair of gothic silver water goblets. When my girlfriends went off to buy a blouse, I scurried over to rummage around by the Duncan Phyfe factory in Brooklyn," she recalled.

Her parents, collectors themselves, encouraged her. The family lived in a Victorian-style house dating back to 1897 and in summer hied themselves off to the edge of the Orange Mountains of New Jersey to live minus electricity or running water in the manner of the early 19th century.

'We were taught to appreciate simplicity and the beauty of nature," she said.

PERHAPS THESE early experiences contributed to Edith's consuming interest in early American primitive pieces of the 17th and 18th centuries. "Primitive doesn't mean crude," she emphasized. No way. It means first, or early. Primitives are beautiful, handcrafted functional pieces."

Her oldest piece is a "rush" lamp, a sort of hand-wrought iron candle from the late 15th century. Another early piece, this one from the 1700s, is a long-handled iron skillet on three legs. A most precious possession is her huge cooking pot, a real museum piece made of non-rusting bog iron, all hand wrought.

The family shares her enthusiasm, Rod doing all the refinishing and restoration and making lamps from such objects as molasses jugs and coffee mills. They have kindled an interest in historical things in their children, too, Scott, 14, and Barbara Dee, 17.

"YOU SHOULD have seen Scott and I tromping through ankle-deep muck to retrieve an old barn door for the museum," said Edith. "He hauled in an enormous leather horse harness, too."

Barbara Dee, who hopes some day to be an archaeologist, often works alongside her mother at the school, unpacking, sorting, moving furniture, getting experience in the making of a museum — all at elbow-grease level.

Edith Wilson is a professional antique appraiser. She also lectures to groups on American primitives, pewter and antiques in general. "But primarily I'm a homemaker," she said, "and I believe in simple, rocking-chair living whenever possible."

Keep those hot spices in the refrig

The homeline
by Dorothy Ritz

Dear Dorothy: Helping to rustle up dinner while visiting a friend, I couldn't find the paprika. My friend said it was in the refrigerator "where it belonged." She was so surprised by my gentle needling that I decided I must be ignorant and figured I'd better find out more. — Virginia Derby

I'll bet your friend is from the Deep South. They're the ones who know about the hot spices, and she's quite right about how they should be stored. It's a mite technical but fun to dip into these things.

Paprika is one of the five key Capsicum spices. The other four are red pepper (cayenne), chili pepper, chili powder and sweet (bell) pepper flakes. All need storing in a cool, dry place, but during the summer in the hotter climates cold storage (38 degrees and low humidity (50 per cent) is the way they keep best. Obviously that means only one place: the refrigerator.

Not knowing about this is why so many people find the color fading in their hot spices and also why they puzzle over insect infestation. Glad you brought the question up, Virginia. Gives me a chance to play "professor."

Dear Dorothy: Some years ago I went through the frustration of trying to put a new cord in a Venetian blind when the old one broke. It happened again and this time attacked it with a new system. Left the old cord where it was and started at the bottom, using the old cord as the path guide. It wasn't easy, but it was right on target. Felt as if I'd climbed Everest. — Jan Rayden

Dear Dorothy: I'm moved to share two ideas my husband came up with for our garage. He put double-faced tape on the wall where our car door was hitting. To this he stuck a thick piece of foam rubber so the car door is protected from nicks and bumps. The second thing was to tie a film can (any small object would do to the ceiling. He placed it so that when we drive in the can touches the front of the hood and we know we've come just far enough. — Mrs. C. Adams

New publicity chairman? There's help on the way

A down-to-earth session on writing club publicity releases and the plain facts on pictures will again be given for all club presidents and news chairmen submitting copy to the Heralds' women's pages.

The publicity workshops, to be held in three sessions Thursday, Sept. 4, in Woodfield's Community Room, will include breaks for coffee and rolls. There is no charge and presidents and publicity chairmen may attend whichever of the three sessions is most convenient.

The first session is scheduled for 9:15 to 11 a.m.; the second, 1:15 to 3 p.m.; the third, 7:15 to 9 p.m.

SESSIONS WILL include details on copy preparation, hints on writing style, deadlines, use of names, submitting copy and clues on how to tell what is newsworthy. Also covered will be how to go about requesting pictures, the use of picture props for greater reader interest and how to tell if a picture would be newsworthy.

PTA and other groups whose news does not appear in the family pages of the Heralds are not specifically invited to the sessions as the coverage will not fill their needs.

So there will be coffee and chairs for all, reservations are requested. Karen Thompson, 394-2300, extension 276, is taking reservations.

DJs set tempo for Randhurst fashion shows

WCFL's platter and chatter disc jockeys, Larry Lujack, Bob Dearborn and Doug Dalgren, will moderate Randhurst's annual Back-to-School fashion shows at 7 p.m. next Thursday and Friday and 2:30 p.m. next Saturday and Sunday.

Fashions from all Randhurst apparel stores will be modeled by youth board members of Randhurst stores and following each showing, a 15-minute dance contest will be held, with autographs, records and other prizes offered to participants as well as members of the audience. Other fashion shows have been coordinated to the theme by various Randhurst stores.

AT 2 P.M. next Friday, Wieboldt's will present "Star Spangled Celebration" a fashion show emphasizing red, white and blue wardrobes.

A special attraction the same day from noon to 1 p.m. will be the appearance of songwriter Gerry Robinson in the Junior Department of Carson Pirie Scott & Co. Robinson, who has written songs for Elvis Presley, Sammy Davis Jr., Ricky Nelson and Glen Campbell, will be plugging his new album and demonstrating his technique of personality composing.

Charles A. Stevens opens its "Junior Notebook" of fall fashions at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, featuring 80 fall outfits worn by area high school models.

A fashion preview especially for home seamstresses will be presented by Randhurst Singer Fashion Center at 7 p.m. Aug. 25.

All showings are free.

MOVING A HEAVY old trunk is a pleasure when you are interested in history and have the enthusiasm and energy of Barbara Dee Wilson and Larry Zemko. They hope to attract other high school youths to the historical museum project which is now "just a bare beginning."

Aug. 10-17 declared Junior Clubwoman Week

Local communities have proclaimed the week of Aug. 10-17 as Junior Clubwoman Week in recognition of the contributions the seven area clubs have made to the communities bearing their names and to encourage prospective members as the clubs begin their fall membership drives.

All seven clubs are scheduling informative coffees or teas to tell their story to interested women and one, the Des Plaines Juniors, is including an ice cream social as part of its membership events.

The ice cream party is Thursday at 8 p.m. at the home of Gail Taylor, 293 S. Wolf Rd., Des Plaines. Area women interested may call 296-7244 or 296-7526 for further information.

The membership coffees and teas will be taking place later this month and throughout September.

ALTHOUGH SOCIAL activities play a significant role in the life of the junior clubwoman, gone is the white-gloved, tea-sipping image. It has been replaced by the image of an active woman who is informed, responsible and involved in community life, thus making her community and world a better place for her family and providing for herself the rewards of serving others.

Arlington Heights, Buffalo Grove, Des Plaines, Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect, Rolling Meadows and Streamwood have all joined in honoring the junior clubwomen, and local libraries, municipal buildings, park district offices and the Northwest Suburban YMCA are featuring displays of club activities.

As members of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, each club shares the advantage of drawing on the extensive resources of the largest women's organization in the world for current information and ideas in areas which can be applied to the needs of the individual community and clubwoman. Areas of service include the arts, conservation, education, health, home life, public affairs and international affairs. While each club may emphasize different areas from time to time, all clubs provide the opportunity for members to participate in their area of interest.

THROUGH THE arts, club women have provided scholarships to local students in art, music and speech. They support related programs in their local schools. They sponsor creative writing and art contests, art fairs and arts and crafts workshops.

In the area of conservation, many clubs were instrumental in the establishment and support of recycling centers. Several are responsible for the establishment and maintenance of gardens to beautify community areas and parks. An Outdoor Education Center in Des Plaines is one example of club effort.

High on the list of priorities is education. Last year alone clubs donated nearly $8,000 in scholarships to local students. Altogether the seven clubs support their public schools and many private schools — Clearbrook, Summit, and Beverly Lakes — and all have contributed to the Association for Children with Learning Disabilities, Aid to Teachers of Exceptional Children, and Channel 11. Libraries, founded by many of the clubs, are supported annually through financial assistance and service.

OVER $3,000 IN contributions were made to the Brain Research Foundation, Cancer Research, Kidney Research, Juvenile Diabetes, SIDS, Reyes Syndrome, the Arthritic Foundation and the Heart Fund. Each club provides service to hospitals and mental health facilities; members hostess blood drives, assist in medical and dental clinics, register children for preschool vision and hearing tests, and financially support community paramedics. Health Expo '75, recently held at Randhurst, was an undertaking of the local junior clubwomen.

Foster children receive support, community breakfasts are sponsored, baby sitting clinics are conducted, and consumer information is provided as club women demonstrate concern for the family and the home.

Public Affairs involves women in safety programs, justice and law observance, citizenship and cultural heritage. Each club is presently planning Bicentennial celebrations. Some have introduced luminaria to their communities, some have initiated community councils, and others support youth groups and involve them in service projects.

Internationally, clubs support CARE, CROP, UNICEF, Project Concern, and many other designated projects.

Benefits are arranged each year by individual clubs to raise funds for their many philanthropies. Together the seven clubs have sponsored an art auction for the benefit of Clearbrook Center.

THE ARLINGTON Heights Juniors and Junior Woman's Club of Des Plaines each have a history of more than 40 years of service. The Junior Woman's Clubs in Elk Grove Village, Mount Prospect and Rolling Meadows have been active for approximately 20 years. The Streamwood Juniors, chartered eight years ago, play a significant role in their community. Newest to the Seventh District Junior organization is the Buffalo Grove Junior Woman's Club, now embarking on its fifth year.

Each club holds general meetings and committee meetings during the evening for the convenience of members.

Membership information is available from Charlene Bessey, public relations chairman for the Seventh District Juniors, at 439-9764.

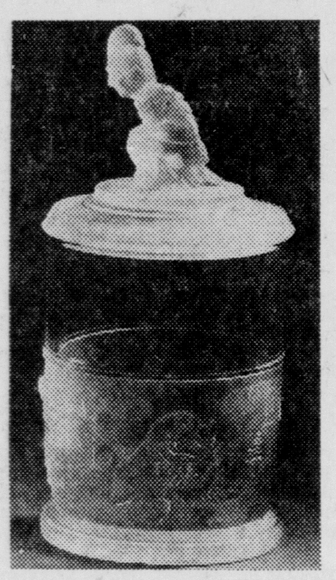

When looking for pattern glass, select the obscure

Collecting
with Grace Carolyn

After I wrote about pattern glass in June, several readers wrote to tell me about their patterns and to ask about reproductions. As I said before, I think it's best to choose a pattern which is more obscure, or lesser known, for so many of the well known patterns have been reproduced for years and years. Even the reproductions, in some cases, have acquired "antiques" status!

The very early, that is early 19th century, flint glasses have been reproduced, but not in the original heavy flint composition, and it is the later patterns, those of the 1870s and 1880s that have been copied most extensively.

Some of the popular patterns which may be copies to watch out for are Coin, Daisy and Button, Lion, Moon and Star, Ruby Thumprint, Three Face and Westward-Ho. There are many others, too, so if it's old glass you're interested in, be sure to study and watch the gift shops and department stores for new offerings.

WESTWARD HO, shown in the picture (courtesy Newspaper Enterprise Association) is one of the most highly prized patterns by collectors. It was originally designed by a German mold maker named Jacobus who worked at Gillinder & Sons in Philadelphia. The pattern was first called "Pioneer" and designs which appear on the various pieces may be traced to similar pictures popularized by Currier & Ives prints.

The Westward Ho was originally made only in clear and in frosted clear, so any colored pieces you may see are reproductions. The quality of the frosting in the repros has improved in recent years, it seems to me. The first copies I saw had a harsh, rough white appearance on the kneeling figure on the finial. In fact, a white powdery substance could be rubbed off with the fingers.

BUT ONE MAY STILL tell the new from the old by the quality of the pattern itself. On copies, the bodies of the deer and buffalo are almost completely hairless, whereas on the old pieces, the hair is clearly defined. Also (a minor point; but it is the mark of the studious collector to note such things) the deer's mouth appears closed in a straight line on the original old glass, more open on the new.

New pieces I have seen are celery vases, covered sugar bowls, wine glasses, goblets, creamers and covered butter dishes. I have heard there is a small-sized covered compote, too. Ruth Webb Lee, authoress of many books on pattern glass, lists sauce dishes in the four-inch size as being reproduced also.

MISS LEE in her book "Early American Pressed Glass" becomes very eloquent in her description of Westward Ho. The title given this popular pattern, she says, is aptly chosen, for "Westward the course of empire takes its way" and our grandfathers well knew it.

"In this frosted design in relief, depicting the log cabin of the pioneer, the bison charging wildly across the plain, the deer fleeing from an unseen hunter, surmounted on all the covered pieces by a knob in the shape of a crouching Indian, we find a patriotic reminder of the state of our country west of the Mississippi before the transcontinental railroads were built. It is the distinctly American appeal of this glass that has made it so widely and eagerly sought by our most discriminating collectors."

I wouldn't be surprised if the Bicentennial provides the incentive for more and more reproductions of old pressed pattern glass, particularly those pieces with a patriotic or historical motif. So a collector of original glass must be extra careful now.

SPECIALIST DEALERS will usually guarantee their pieces, and I would insist on this money-back guarantee. Be extra cautious if a piece seems to be ridiculously low priced, for an unscrupulous dealer hasn't the courage to ask the "old" price.

Bargains can be expensive when collecting antiques — this may be the costliest lesson a collector may ever learn. I have bought a few costly bargains in my time. Luckily, I haven't seen my pattern "Hummingbird" or sometimes called "Flying Robin" or "Bird and Fern" reproduced as yet. But that doesn't mean it won't be, and so I have saved the receipts with "guaranteed old" marked by the dealer.

Laura Raymo made her own gown

Laura Marie Raymo made her own gown for her marriage July 12 to Frank James Walsworth. The polyester crepe gown featured crocheted lace trim and a seven-foot lace train. A headpiece of the same lace held her veil which was edged in crocheted daisies, and she carried white roses with baby's breath.

Daughter of the Charles Raymos, Arlington Heights, Laura and Frank, son of the James F. Walsworths, also of Arlington Heights, were married in St. Edna's Catholic Church, Arlington Heights, in a 3:30 p.m. double ring service.

Christine Bohr, Westchester, was maid of honor, and Laura's sisters, Charlene, Patricia and Marianne, were bridesmaids. All wore print gowns in apricot and white and carried white roses, daisies and baby's breath with apricot-tinted carnations. Also in apricot and white was the flower girl, Laura's 5-year-old sister, Christine, who carried her flowers in a basket.

LAWRENCE FISCHER, Arlington Heights, was best man, and ushers were the groom's brothers, John and Robert.

The couple greeted 100 guests at a dinner reception in the Holiday Inn in Rolling Meadows, after which they left on a honeymoon in New England and Cape Cod. They are now residing in Arlington Heights.

A graduate of Hersey High and Lutheran General Hospital School of Nursing, Laura is a nurse at Lutheran General. Frank, a graduate of Hersey, also studied at MIT in Cambridge, Mass. and the University of Southern California in Los Angeles. He is with Harko Builders, Chicago.

KIDS' KORNER

THE LAST STRAW

This goofy game is good for a rainy day when you have to stay inside. Each player has a paper cup and a drinking straw cut in half. He holds one straw half in each hand.

Cut several other drinking straws into one-inch pieces. Pile them on the floor so all players can reach them. At the "go" signal, each player tries to pick up a small straw piece and drop it in his cup. He can use only the straws in his hands to pick it up.

Players pick up straw pieces until they are gone. Winner is the one with the most pieces of straw in his cup.

2nd campus planned

Vote may sway Harper's trend

year colleges have usually moved toward being four year colleges," he says, "but I don't see that happening at Harper. I do see the spectrum of courses becoming broad and cooperative programs developing so that soon you'll be able to go to the community college for everything from high school continuation courses to graduate school."

Another immediate development for Harper is the expansion of extension centers where classes will be offered away from the college's main campus. The first center which will offer both day and evening classes will open this fall in the Willow Park Shopping Center in Wheeling.

Thomas McCabe, math professor and leader in the faculty senate, is one of the teachers who volunteered for what is now being called the "Willow Park campus."

"I think moving out into shopping centers may bring Harper closer to the community," McCabe says. "I see all kinds of interesting opportunities there. I would like to see the college go into the direction of a lot of "disposable" campuses like that."

For Lahti the growth of extension centers and the "cafeteria" concept ties into another development — extending the number of hours classes are offered on the campus.

"An organization like this should be open 18 hours a day," he says. "If we had the staff and could get organized, we could stay open until midnight right now and have students. That development probably isn't any further away than our imagination can work it out."

Another possible development, probably further away than most imaginations, is the possibility of providing foreign study for Harper students, Lahti says. "There could be international implications for this institution," he says. "We already have faculty interested in study abroad. Why shouldn't the students in our food service program go to France to study with some master chefs."

WHILE SURVEYING the prospects for the future, those associated with Harper are also aware of the pitfalls which await the school. If the faculty votes to affiliate with a union this fall, for example, the college board will be faced with full scale collective bargaining.

Faculty unionization may mean, as some faculty members fear, the hardening of the adversary position between board, administration and faculty. On the other hand, it may bring a positive change in a strained relationship.

Board Chairman Shirley Munson says, "I think we are moving into a very unique time in board-faculty relations. There seems to be a common movement throughout the country for faculties to want to participate more in administrative decisions. I think we have to be aware of this and I hope it will evolve in a peaceful and mature way."

Another problem facing Harper, and particularly Harper's teachers, is how to maintain standards with an increasingly varied student body. Powell, an English teacher, says, "To often our grading standards are such that the students who are not very eager can do as well as the serious students. I think we should fight that."

RONALD STEWART, associate professor of sociology and a member of the original faculty, agrees. "We should work with the community," he says, "but we should maintain standards of academic excellence. There is a tremendous antagonism toward the traditional grading system, but we should resist that. We should continually upgrade the quality of the faculty."

Still another pitfall is the chance the college will, in the words of State Rep. Eugenia Chapman, develop "hardening of the arteries" and become complacent.

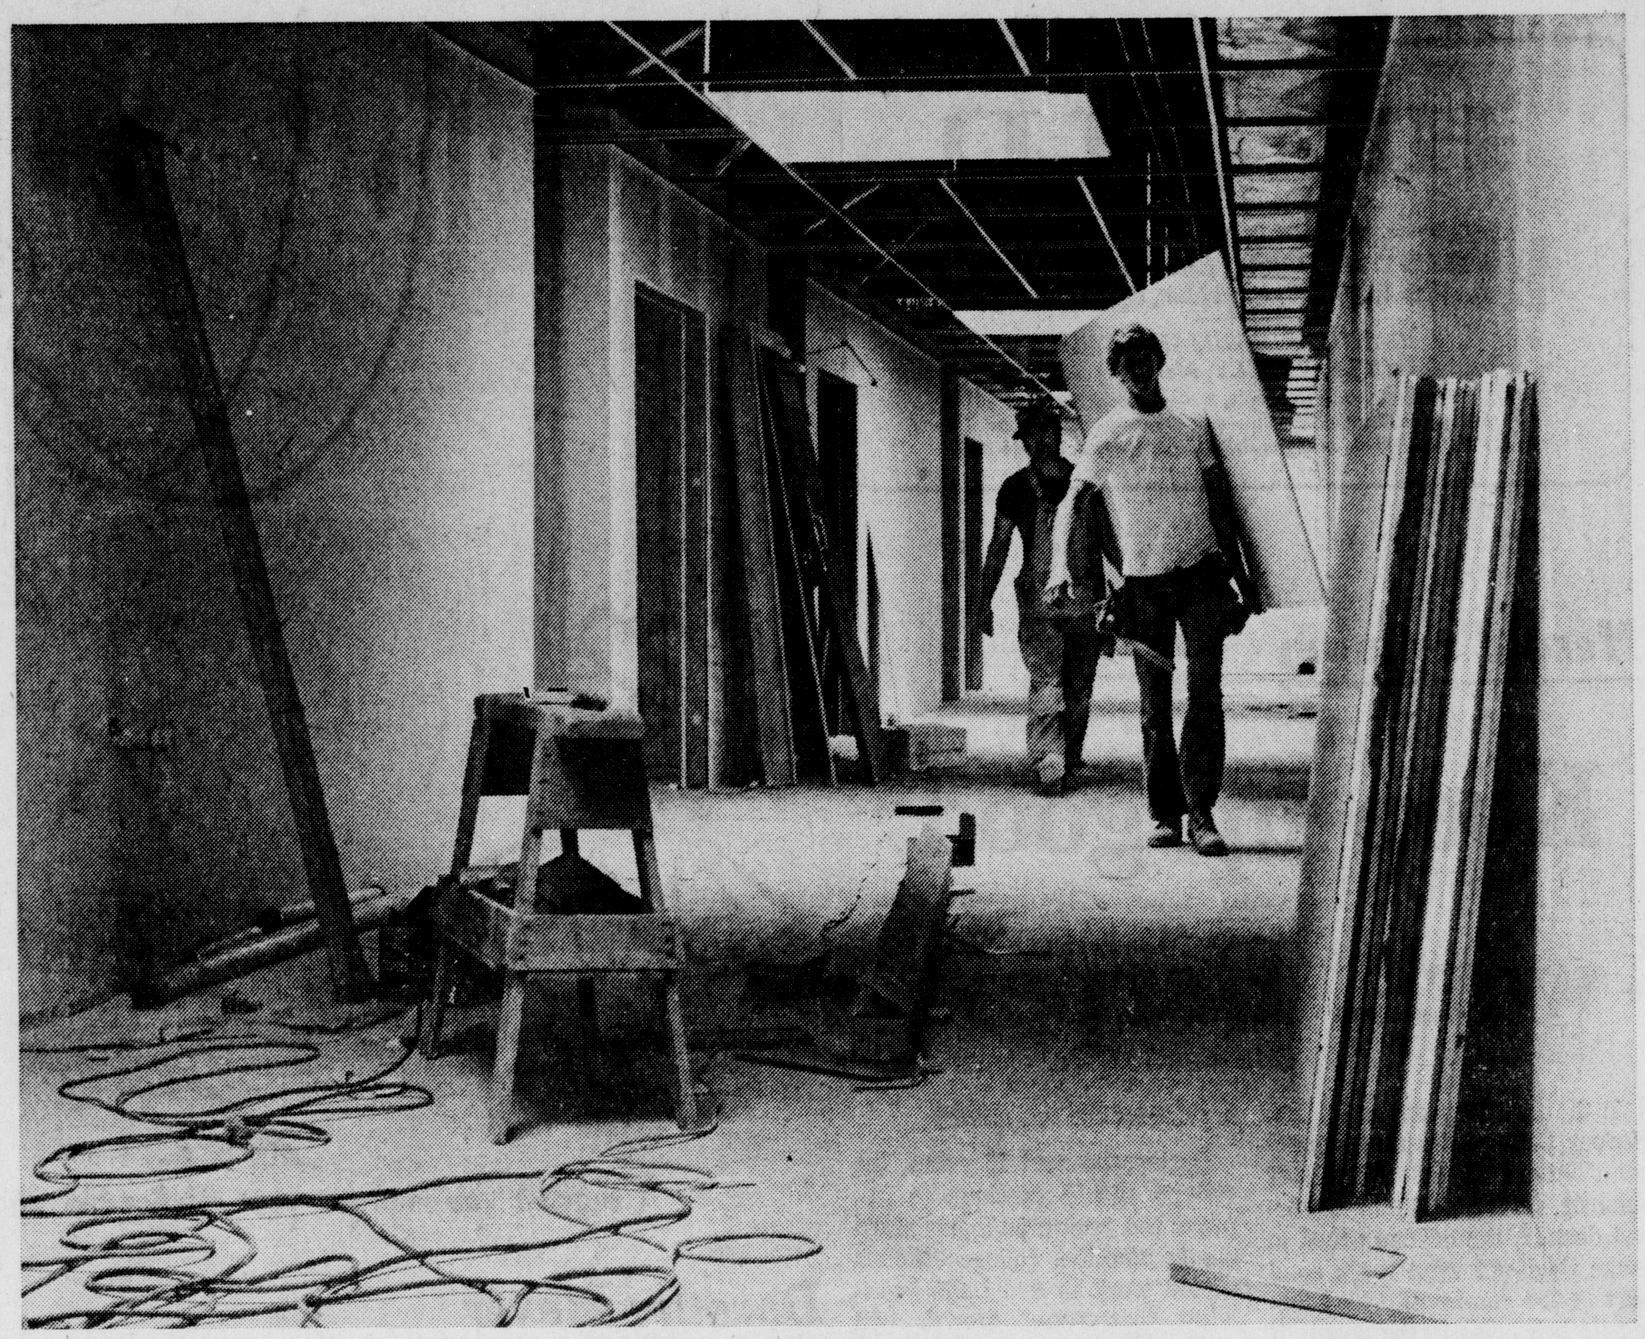

Lahti phrases the problem differently, but also sees the danger. "I'm afraid we might be locked into our conventional thinking. If we become too traditional that will be a problem to us. We can't just sit back at this point," he says.

Harper open house set for Wednesday

Harper College will have an open house Wednesday at 7 p.m. starting in the college center on the campus, Algonquin and Roselle roads, Palatine.

Guided tours of the campus will begin at 7 p.m., followed at 8 p.m. by the introduction of college officials and a presentation on the college. Members of the Harper staff will be available to answer questions.

The open house is particularly designed for parents of new students and is open to all interested citizens.

WORKMEN ARE PREPARING classrooms for Harper students in the Willow Park Shopping Center in Wheeling. The space in the shopping center, called the Willow Park campus by the college, will have day and evening classes for students beginning with the fall semester. Such campuses away from the Palatine campus may be one of the things that will mark Harper College's development in the future.

Churches still worried over future of the family

Some five years ago, in its Christmas cover story, Time magazine announced to the world that the American family was in a deep crisis.

The changing life-styles so dominant in the late 1960s — communal living, increased divorce, birth control and abortion, mobility and the changing role of women — seemed to be knocking the supports out from under the traditional American nuclear family.

While the disaster that many social analysts were predicting a half a decade ago hasn't yet come to pass, many church leaders are still deeply concerned and believe the family, as a primary social unit, is still in a crisis.

The Roman Catholic Church, for example, has chosen the family as topic for its fourth regional hearing on its bicentennial theme of "'Liberty and Justice for All."

THE HEARINGS, in Atlanta, this weekend, will involve both Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin, president of the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and Bishop James S. Rausch, general secretary of the bishops' conference and its action arm, the U. S. Catholic Conference, underlining the importance attached to the topic.

A wide range of Protestants, with Sen. Mark O. Hatfield, R-Ore., as their honorary chairman, have called for a "Continental Congress on the Family" to meet in St. Louis this fall.

"Our most basic institution, the family, is in serious trouble," said J. Allan Petersen, executive director of the group putting the congress together. "As our nation approaches its bicentennial year, fresh insights and new cooperative efforts to strengthen the family are needed."

The congress is a part of a two-year program aimed at making 1976 "the year of the family."

Congress planners anticipate some 3,000 delegates will show up in St. Louis for the Oct. 13-17 meeting.

THEY WILL include a fair number of experts on the subject — family counselors, psychologists, sociologists, educators, religious leaders, businessmen and government officials.

The planners hope the congress will be a practical one, developing strategies which help individuals and churches deal with the changing pattern of family life.

In addition to dealing with such issues as the shifting roles of men and women, sexual mores, divorce and remarriage, the planners also say they want to "awaken Christian consciences to the special family needs of minorities, singles and the aged."

"Participants will also clarify the biblical principles for marriage and family life and will relate these to current spiritual and social problems," according to the organizers.

"I am concerned over the deterioration, in these tumultuous times," said Hatfield, "of what should be the basis of all our daily lives — the family.

"History has proven that no nation can remain strong without a solid family structure. Now is the time to revitalize the importance of the family as a viable unit in today's society."

Herald opinion

Keep up good work, Harper

In the first 10 years of its life, Harper College has made many contributions to the Northwest suburbs. As it heads into its second decade, the college needs to make itself an even more solid part of the community by keeping its ties close to the people it serves.

As noted in a Herald series this week, the college was originally envisioned as a small school mainly serving students who had just completed their high school education. Its growth, to the point where it will serve more than 14,000 credit and non-credit students this fall, has meant the college has long since surpassed those original plans.

Many of the programs offered by the college, including those specifically designed for adults returning to school, have been excellent and have provided real service for the community.

During the next 10 years, the college should continue to improve the programs it has started. In addition, college officials should work to avoid the possibility that rapid growth will serve to isolate the college from the community.

In the past, Harper has been so caught up in its own growth that it has been easy for the college to lose touch with its constituents. The college board and administration have sometimes been less than open with the community, for example, by holding closed meetings for questionable reasons.

These trends should not continue into the future. By opening the Willow Park campus, an extension center housed in a shopping center in Wheeling, the college has already taken an important step toward improving its communication with the community. Such extension centers, "disposable campuses" as they have been called by some at the school, will do much to bring Harper close to the public as the college's enrollment increases.

During the past year, the Harper board has taken some important steps toward openness. That openness, which should extend to all aspects of the board's deliberations and the problems of the college, should be encouraged.

As the college grows older, continuing its unparalled growth, it must continue adapting itself to the expectations and needs of the people of all ages whom it serves.

EDITORIAL: Teacher strikes are becoming more and more a threat in the Northwest suburbs.

Our bank records deserve safeguards

The American Bankers Assn. has urged Congress to protect bank records from unreasonable searches. We support its stand; this is the kind of protection we increasingly need against the encroachments of the federal government.

The villain is the Internal Revenue Service, which in the past has issued "John Doe" (no-name) subpoenas. This tactic permits the IRS to conduct a wide-ranging search of bank records of many persons, rather than a specific search seeking the financial records of one person.

The ABA is angered because of the growing cost of such sweeping searches. Also, it is concerned that John Doe subpoenas threaten the confidentiality of depositors' records.

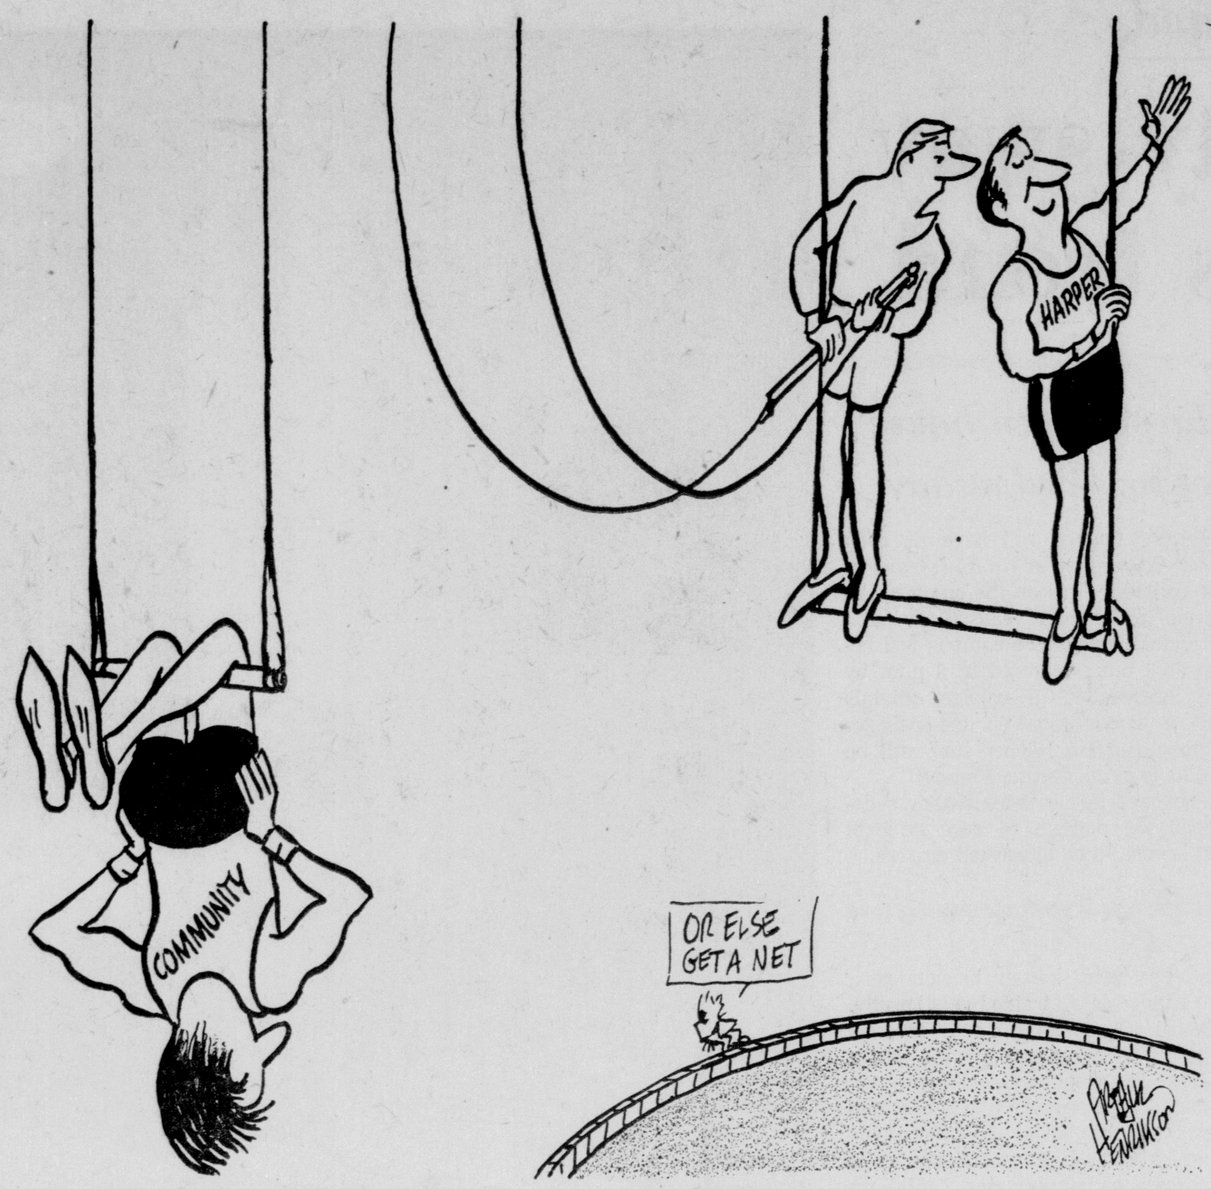

The IRS does have a legitimate need to seek specific financial information on specific individuals. But the broad searches now permitted (and recently approved by a U.S. Supreme Court decision) unnecessarily extend the government's intrusion into our private affairs.

We need legislation to help turn back this intrusion, and we support the ABA's efforts in this direction.

NORFOLK, Va., Aug 9 — Virginia's Gov. Dunmore told White Eyes, chief of the Delawares, that King George had "strong hold of the belt of friendship" with the tribe and would protect their lands. The colonists also sent agents to the Indians seeking either assistance or neutrality.

I suggest you improve your relationship with the catcher.

A dim view of 'hands' project

I'm as patriotic as the next guy and a lot more so than a couple hundred thousand cynics I can think of, and I'm very excited about the Bicentennial. However, there's one suggested project that doesn't do a thing for my patriotism.

That's the Hands Across the Nation thing, where a couple million Americans are supposed to form a line next Fourth of July, to join hands and stretch from coast to coast.

Although the line has thoughtfully been detoured around the Grand Canyon, there are so many smaller obstacles across the country that the Grand Canyon seems unimportant.

There are the Iowa farmers, for instance, who may take a dim view of a hundred thousand people holding hands in the middle of their corn which is supposed to be knee high that day.

And almost every farm of any kind has a cantankerous bull on the premises and show me anyone who's going to keep holding hands when there's a bull coming at them.

DOROTHY MEYER

If the line is detoured around the farms, it'll have to go through the cities where it will create massive traffic jams and gaper's blocks. And if it avoids the cities, it'll go through my backyard and I've got enough trouble with the cat sleeping in my flower garden without six or seven people standing in it.

Even assuming that a line can be laid out that won't endanger the handholders or rile the citizenry, there's the problem of recruiting. Every PTA chairman knows what the committee is going to hear.

"Gee, I'd really love to help, but Junior has been exposed to chicken pox."

"—Grandma broke her hip."

"—I'll be out of town on business."

"—I'm pregnant."

Then there's the "no-shows," those who promise to be there but never turn up. At least 50 per cent of the recruits will have to have really long arms to take up the gaps of the no-shows — and the drop-outs.

There will be drop-outs, you can be sure.

Women who agreed to hold hands even though they are pregnant will go into premature labor in the middle of the Mohave Desert, downtown Dallas and my flowerbed. The unemployed who signed up because they're used to standing in line anyway, will suddenly get jobs. At last 150,000 people will break out in a rash from the Iowa corn and Kansas wheat, and another 350,000 noses will start to itch.

Hands will get sweaty and I know three people who can't stand contact with a clammy hand.

I don't know about you, but I plan to spend July 4, 1976 in the Grand Canyon.

Hoffa clue buried in his past?

by DAVID SMOTHERS
UPI Senior Editor

DETROIT — Jimmy Hoffa, the battling, bristling "little fellow," would never go without putting up a fight.

He would never go anywhere willingly, without telephoning his wife, Josephine, first. He was that kind of a man.

The feisty loner would never go anywhere with anybody he did not trust.

How or why, then, was James Riddle Hoffa, 62, former and aspiring to be future president of the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, induced or compelled to vanish from a suburban shopping plaza parking lot nine days ago without putting up a fight, without calling his wife, without betraying the slightest sign of suspicion that he might be in mortal danger?

If anybody knows — and somebody almost undoubtedly does — the many forces searching for Hoffa would dearly love to hear from him.

The answer to the riddle is undoubtedly buried somewhere in the recent past of this 5-foot-5 dynamo — the guy the big long-haul truckers fondly call "the little fellow."

Hoffa is — or was — a human firecracker, or more accurately, a ticking time bomb.

He has stood in harm's way practically all of his brawling life, from the day when, working for 32 cents an hour, he called his first strike at a Kroger Grocery loading dock in 1931, through his four years, nine months and 16 days in the Lewisburg, Pa., federal penitentiary, and in these last four years of freedom, years of fretful waiting, hoping and plotting for a return to the power that has been his passion.

Asking for trouble lately, Hoffa has:

• Been making battle plans to take over the Teamsters again.

His target in the election next year is Frank E. Fitzsimmons, his one-time trusted lieutenant and verbal punching bag to whom he gave up the scepter while still in prison in 1971, a half-year before then President Nixon commuted his sentence.

His stumbling block is a Nixon stipulation, now under appeal in federal court, barring him from union leadership until March, 1980.

• Become involved, very unwillingly, in a federal grand jury investigation of five years of violence swirling about his old flagship, Teamsters Local No. 299 of Detroit.

Less than four weeks ago, a bomb ripped open the local's Lincoln Continental assigned to its vice president, Richard Fitzsimmons, who happens to be Frank Fitzsimmons' son. Last year, a boat owned by Dave Johnson, the local president and firm Hoffa ally, was similarly destroyed by a bomb. At various other times Johnson and other local officials have been beaten, shot and shot at.

Hoffa talked to the grand jury, but not much, saying afterwards he "just flatly refused to answer their silly questions." There is talk, however, that the grand jury wanted to hear more from him, particularly about questionable loans made lately from the Teamsters' pension fund.

• Never escaped the shadow of the Mafia.

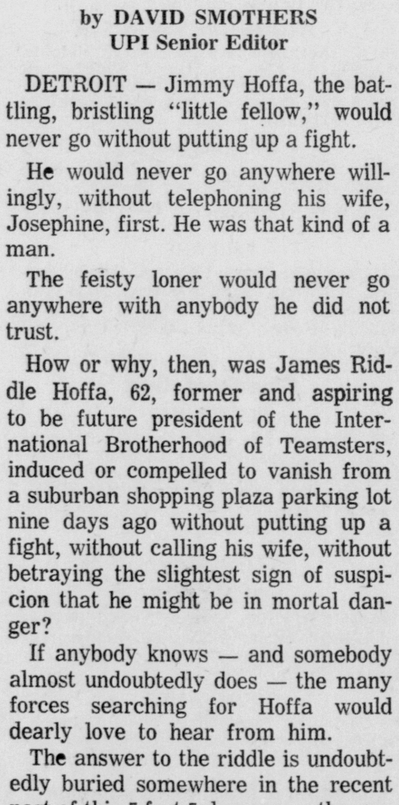

The man he planned to meet — but apparently didn't — for lunch that Wednesday was Anthony "Tony Jack" Giacalone, a reputed crime syndicate chieftain described variously as a longtime Hoffa friend and a recent adversary.

The Senate Rackets Committee once contended Hoffa ran "a hoodlum empire." But the word lately has been that the mob does not want Hoffa back in power again because, in the words of a Teamster vice president, "Jimmy generates more heat than an ICBM."

Most of the men who knew and followed Hoffa are convinced he would never have left the parking lot and his car in front of the Bloomfield Township restaurant without stirring up some heat.

Paul Allen, business manager of Riggers Local No. 275 and one of Hoffa's closest friends, said "Jimmy was a loner. He would never have kept that appointment at the restaurant without knowing exactly whom he was meeting."

Teamster John DeGutis said, "He wasn't the kind to give up easy. If three guys tried to force him out of that car there would have been a scuffle. It had to be somebody he knew — somebody he respected."

The almanac

Today is Saturday, Aug. 9, the 221st day of 1975 with 144 to follow.

The moon is between its new phase and first quarter.

The morning stars are Mars, Jupiter and Saturn.

The evening stars are Mercury and Venus.

Those born on this day are under the sign of Leo.

English author Izaak Walton was born Aug. 9, 1593.

On this day in history:

• In 1831, the first train in the United States to be drawn by a steam locomotive made a run between Albany and Schenectady, N. Y.

• In 1945, more than half of the Japanese city of Nagasaki was destroyed when the United States dropped its second atomic bomb.

• In 1970, 54 American citizens were among 99 persons killed when an airliner crashed in Peru.

• In 1974, President Nixon's resignation became effective at noon and Vice President Gerald Ford was sworn in as the nation's 38th chief executive.

A thought for the day: A line in Izaak Walton's "The Compleat Angler" says, "I have laid aside business, and gone a-fishing."

'Come hear pet serenade'

You are all cordially invited to the serenade of the dogs.

The place, of course, is our "quiet" retreat from work and the bustle of the world, where we earn our bucks to pay taxes.

The serenade sometimes begins as early as 4:30 a.m. and goes on into the night, well after any taxpayer would be asleep, if he could.

It's B.Y.O.B., of course, for tranquilizing medicinal purposes only. I never use the stuff, I must be alert at work, so I use toothpicks.

Please bring as many as can come. Everyone should be exposed to this torturous culture.

You'll have to excuse the place, though, because it smells. You see, they also like to toilet at the secluded corner of our house, by the windows, and the cats have their "burial spot" in the flowers under the front windows.

You really have to come over though, to appreciate their talent and timing, but they have lots of time to practice, you see when you don't have to pay taxes it leaves lots of time to develop talents and sleep lots, too, whenever you want to.

So come anytime. We're home suffering except weekdays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., when we work.

A loyal but chagrined taxpayer.

Needs blacktop

I feel it is my duty to bring to your attention a condition that I feel is very dangerous to the children living in Arlington Vista.

In order for our children to reach the swimming pool in Ivy Hill, they must either walk or ride their bikes along Windsor Drive. Since there is no sidewalk they must ride on the road.

Before a child is hurt, why can't a blacktop section of the shoulder be installed?

Let's not wait like was done with the lights at Palatine and Windsor, where three deaths occurred before they were installed.

Sue Novara, more than a good woman cyclist

Flint's star aims at Tamara Piltskova

Mike Klein
Staff Sportswriter

They are a small community, numbering only in the hundreds and scattered from sea to shining sea. But when they gather and you sit among them on the damp evening grass, it's nearly the sensation of an outdoor folk music festival.

Tranquility and peace prevailed at those festivals. And these people seem to understand it, too.

For the most part, these are young Americans, kids really. Some don't have jobs because they're hard at labor preparing to defend the red, white and blue.

Few are past their mid-twenties. And the great majority are teenagers. These are athletes who'll carry American colors in world cycling championships. World class athletes like Sue Novara.

Sue lives in Flint, Mich. "Don't you dare write Detroit," she says with spunk. "Everybody does that."

Nineteen years old and the epitome of America's impressive cycling strengh, Sue's high school graduation portrait must have been a dazzler. For Sue is a beautiful young woman.

From a distance, it's the long hair which attracts you. And closer up, Sue's spacious smile. But face-to-face, Sue's eyes command your attention. They glisten.

"I was born when there were all guys in the neighborhood and I really never had any girlfriends, even in school," Sue said Thursday evening as cycles buzzed around the Meadowhill Park track in Northbrook.

"I never had the time to do all the things they did. . .going to parties and all that."

Sue pauses a moment, gazes at passing cyclists and then starts up again, almost in self-defense.

"I guess people have always thought I'm a loner," she explains. "But that's the way you've got to be if you're going to accomplish anything in life. You've got to do it yourself.

"All those people from high school have graduated and moved away or gotten married. You never see them anymore. But I'm still with these people."

Sue is the second of Jim Novara's four daughters. Mini is 21 and Sue proudly says her older sister won a national cheerleading championship. Todi is 10 and thinks she might become a cyclist. Gina is just five.

Second daughter Sue burst into the cycling spotlight two years ago when she placed second nationally in women's match sprints and fifth worldwide.

Last weekend at Meadowhill, Sue captured her second consecutive national sprint title. And now there is this message for Tamara Piltskova of the U.S.S.R.: Your best will not be good enough two weeks hence in Belgium.

Tamara wefeated Sue by 1/100th of a second last summer. "I thought I had won but the photofinish showed I lost," Sue said. That's a one-inch defeat.

But Sue would remind you that nobody can live on last year's laurels. Not even a Tamara Piltskova.

It was a peaceful group of cyclists who whirled around Meadowhill Park Thursday evening. The pressure of last weekend's national championships was long gone. This night was for fun.

"This is easier than training," said Sue who'll push her two-wheeler up to 50 miles daily, with sprint speeds of nearly 40 miles-per-hour. She says that's 200 leg revolutions per minute.

Sue Novara has spent her past seven years in total disdain for junk food, late night parties, too many soft drings and anything which might keep her from winning the women's world match sprints championships.

It's a long way from her days as an 11-year-old speed skater in Flint. "I couldn't do anything. I was getting clobbered and couldn't even qualify," said Sue, who eventually improved on ice, too, and now holds every Michigan state women's speed skating record.

"The people in skating were using bike riding to stay in shape during summer. That's how I started."

America the Beautiful has been a second rate cycling power since World War II when our professional racing died and the amateur sport became a wanderlust adventure.

But that's all changing. America boasts more good, young cyclists now than during any of the past 30 years. Credit the health boom, baby boom and recreation boom.

Northbrook's Torchy Peden, cycling's greatest six-day racer from the early 1920's through 1948, says this: "For every good racer we used to have, there's a minimum of three just as good and three more chasing them.

"We could get results better even than we expect if not at the World Games this month, then perhaps at the Pan-Ams (October in Mexico City)."

While New Jersey's Steve Woznick should score heavily in Belgium, it's the women's team which has American coach Jack Disney excited.

Sheila Young, only 24, is the oldster among U.S. women. And everyone says Sue should be the world's fastest for many years. But Sue wants credit greater than being just a good woman racer.

"I get my satisfaction out of being able to compete with guys. I don't want people to look at me and say I'm a good woman cyclist," said Sue. "I want them to say I'm a good rider, period.

"I've seen so many girls who were good locally and people would say, 'She's good for a girl.' I don't want them to say that about me."

To that point, Sue abandoned training with women. "A lot of girls won't train hard enough," she said. "They ride a few miles a week. . .maybe 150, which is nice, but they don't do enough track work."

I asked what happens to Sue Novara in five years. Her eyes glistened. Four or five world championships, she said. Then probably coaching.

"The women need a coach. There's lots of good little girls coming up," she said. "We could really do something in the coming years."

But for Sue Novara, it all comes down to those Aug. 21-30 championships in Belgium. Where, incidentally, Tamara Piltskova also plans on winning.

Her sparking eyes wandered past the Meadowhill Park lights. "Think," Sue said slowly, "maybe two weeks from now I'll be world's champion."

And the beautiful girl broke into a beautiful smile.

National tournament next for Irving-Lake

by CHARLIE DICKINSON

Indiana felt the bite from Irving-Lake, the Illinois Senior Babe Ruth champions, for the second time and it cost them the Ohio Valley Region championship.

The title game in Fort Knox, Ky. came down to the unbeaten representatives from Illinois and Indiana, who had lost just a single game to Irving-Lake in the opening round of the tournament.

Riding on the arm and bat of Jim Dastice, Irving-Lake whipped the Hoosiers 5-0 for the regional championship and earned a trip to Seattle, Wash. for the national finals.

Dastice went seven innings for Irving-Lake, scattering just three hits and striking out 11.

"Our pitching was just incredible the whole tournament," said Irving-Lake coach Lou Bocci. "We played four games and gave up just three earned runs. I had planned on using (Keith) Abraham a lot when the other pitchers tried but he only went two innings all week. We just didn't need him."

Dastice took control of the game offensively, in the third inning. With two outs, first baseman Marty Luquet walked and went to second when Gary Oslance grounded to the shortstop. The force at second missed when the second baseman was pulled off the bag by the throw.

Dastice then made the best of the situation by drilling a 450-foot homer into the wind for all the runs he would need.

Glenn Stromberg doubled home Al Pondel with another run in the fourth inning and Luquet, who had doubled, was driven in by Russ Zonca in the fifth.

Irving-Lake's route to their first regional championship in the club's history included wins over Ft. Knox and Kentucky as well as the opening and closing games with Indiana.

"I think the important thing we did in this tournament was to take advantage of the opportunities we had," Bocci said. "If they made an error, boom, we'd hit a shot and get a run. It went like that all week."

In four games Irving-Lake collared just 25 hits and 15 of those came from two players, Jeff Ironside and Russ Zonca. Ironside, who is in his final season of Senior Babe Ruth competition, was 8-for-13 and didn't commit a single error in the field. Zonca was a sparkling 7-for-14 at the plate.

The next stop is Seattle. The Irving-Lake team needs to raise $4,000 but whether they get it or not they will be leaving for the coast Wednesday, Aug. 13.

Their opening game in the week-long tournament will be Sunday, Aug. 17 at 2:30 p.m. against the champions of the Mid-Atlantic Region.

Crampton new PGA leader

A couple of more days like he had Friday are all Bruce Crampton needs to drive him into semi-retirement.

Crampton, one of the most active players on the pro golf tour, shattered the course record with a seven-under-par 63 to take over the second round lead in the PGA Championship by three strokes.

"Maybe if I won a few of these majors, you guys wouldn't see so much of me," the Australian veteran told a crowd of newsmen.

He's still looking for the first major title of a 19-year pro career. In the last four years he was second three times to Jack Nicklaus in one or the other of the "Big Four" events, so he decided last spring to do a little Nicklaus-type preparation for the Masters.

"I took the week off before the Masters to prepare," Crampton said. "And I missed the cut.

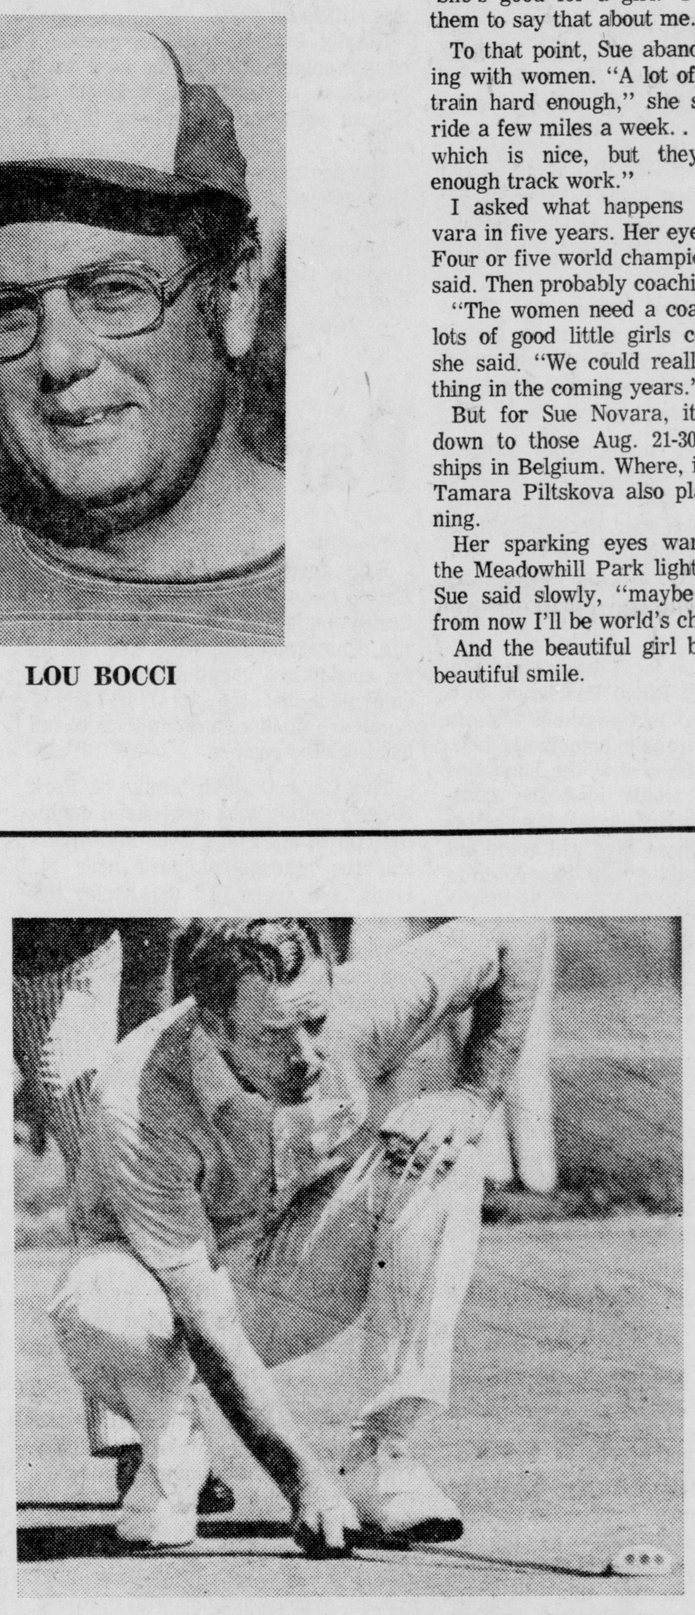

"I haven't been secure enough in the past to take time off and prepare like Jack or some of the others do," Crampton said. "I don't have the empire behind me like Nicklaus."

His round included nine threes and nine fours. He eagled the 500-yard second hole and chipped in for a birdie on the 625-yard 16th, and finished 36 holes at 134, six under.

Hale Irwin, who had a pretty good day of his own, a 65 that included a hole-in-one, was in second place at 137.

Nicklaus, with a record 15 major titles, the favorite here as usual and the year's leading moneywinner, shot a 68 Friday and was tied for third place at 138 with a pair of obscure, winless pros, Mark Hayes and Bob Wynn.

Crampton's 63 broke the record of 64 on this 7,180-yard Firestone Country Club South course, one of the longest and most difficult tournament courses in the country, that had been set in 1968 by Don Bies and equalled since by Lanny Wadkins, Gay Brewer and Tom Weiskopf.

BRUCE CRAMPTON eyes another putt that fell for a birdie Friday in record-shattering round of 63 at PGA Tournament in Akron, Ohio.

Cubs split in Atlanta; White Sox fall

There wasn't much to talk about Friday evening in Chicago baseball.

The Cubs scored only three runs in a doubleheader in Atlanta, a hitter's paradise, but still managed to escape with a split.

The White Sox, who had feasted for three straight wins on a crippled California team, dropped a 7-4 decision to surging Baltimore.

Pinch-hitter John Summers drove in one run with a sacrifice fly and Gene Hiser singled home another in the seventh inning to give the Cubs a 3-1 victory in the second game.

Carl Morton tossed a five-hitter to lead the Braves to a 1-0 triumph in the opener.

The first two of Chicago's runs in the second game were unearned and came off starter and loser Bruce Dal Canton, 0-5.

MARK HAYES hits out of a trap at No. 8 and winds up with a bogey five in PGA at Firestone Country Club. Hayes, the first round leader with a 67, had a 71 Friday and is tied for third.

In the seventh inning Steve Swisher was safe on Darrell Evans' two-base throwing error. Pinch-runner Bill Bonham was sacrificed to third and Summers got the run home on a sacrifice fly.

Don Kessinger followed with a single, Rick Monday walked and Hiser singled home Kessinger from second.

In the ninth Chicago added a run when Monday singled, went to second on Hiser's infield out and scored on Jerry Morales' single.

The victory went to starter Ray Burris, 9-9, who worked six innings before being relieved by Darold Knowles. In the opener Tom Dettore pitched six innings in taking the loss.

Baltimore broke open a tight game in Chicago with three runs in the eighth inning, driving White Sox starter Wilbur Wood from the mound, and then held on for the victory before 12,199 fans.

The Sox slapped out 10 hits against three Baltimore pitchers, including two singles and a home run by Deron Johnson, but the Orioles never trailed.

A human snack!

'Sharks tend to investigate people and one way they do it is to bite!"

by LILLIAN O'CONNELL

The year 1975 may go down as the Year of the Shark.

The best selling novel "Jaws" is now a smash hit movie and suddenly the great white shark is on everyone's mind. But few realize that the facts about the carnivore are as awesome as the fiction.

Dr. Gareth Nelson, associate curator in the Department of Ichthyology at the American Museum of Natural History, says sharks have some of the same mystic as dinosaurs.

" 'Jaws' is an indication of this," Nelson said. "Sharks have a special appeal to people — especially little children, who have the idea that the shark is something that can eat them up.

"Like in fairy tales — being eaten up by the big bad wolf, and all that. And dinosaurs personify that. The big monster shark does, too. And to a lesser extent, bears and lions. But bears and lions, they're furry, they're warm, they're cuddly almost. Dinosaurs and sharks are not."

The average length of an adult great white is 18 feet, according to the National Geographic Society. One taken off Cuba measured 21 feet. The tooth of a great white dredged up from the Atlantic Ocean floor measured more than five inches long.

Large or small, fast or slow, peaceful or aggressive, every other shark — and all marine creatures as well — give sea room to the great white shark, the Society says.

Nelson agrees, referring to the great white shark as "a high-class predator."

"There aren't very many animals that would eat a great white shark. I don't know that any animal has ever been recorded that eats one," Nelson said, adding "maybe a killer whale could dispose of a white shark.

"And, of course, there are smaller white sharks that could be eaten by larger sharks. There are sharks that eat other sharks from time to time."

Nelson points out that you can only speculate on how rare the great white shark really is.

"In general it is true that there are some fishes that man thinks are very rare because he sees them very seldom. This is only because man has not yet gained access to the areas of the world where these organisms are abundant," he said.

"Almost all fishes are abundant somewhere. Man knows about things that live in fresh water and he knows about things that live along the fringes of continents and islands. He knows very little about what goes on in the open ocean and precious little about what goes on in the deep sea."

Rare or not, we do know, according to Nelson, that the great white shark has been positively identified by its distinctive teeth in 32 attacks on human beings and boats — more than any other shark.

"This doesn't mean that the great white shark has attacked more people than any other kind of shark. It means that for the times that the shark could be identified, he has attacked more," Nelson said.

In 1916 a shark or sharks attacked five swimmers along the New Jersey coast. Four died and the fifth lost a leg. Shortly afterward a fisherman caught a great white shark with human remains in its stomach.

"Most bathers never see the shark that bites them. They have no idea that there's a shark doing anything," Nelson explained. "And they feel something, a bump or something like that. They usually don't feel any pain if they've been bitten even. And before they know it, they may have been extensively damaged by a shark. In some cases the first indication they have is when they discover that a big chunk of their leg is gone."

All sharks can do damage if they want to attack, but Nelson says the most common sharks never bother people. "They're not interested in eating people. Sharks don't make a living eating people. They're looking to eat what they always eat.

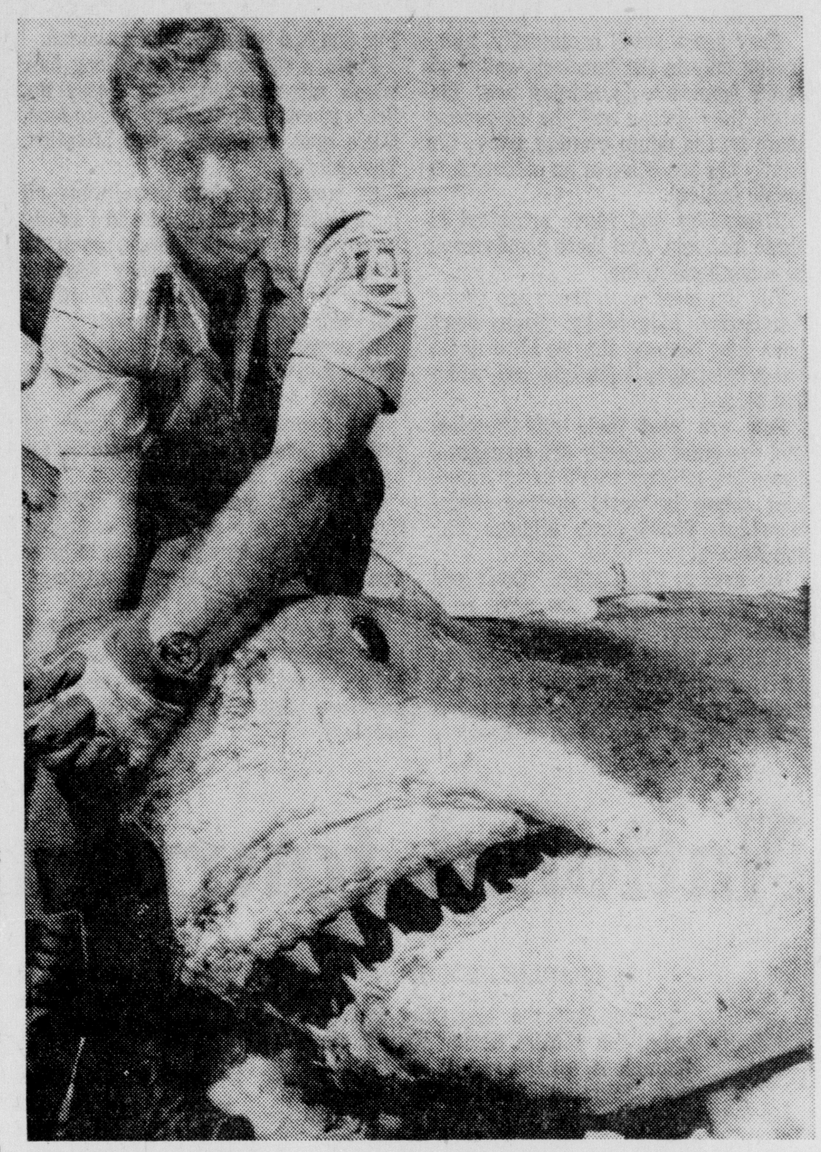

"Sharks tend to investigate people and one way they do it is to bite. But generally they take a bite or two bites and then they go away. Tiny sharks don't bother you. If you're in the water with a tiny shark, he's going in the other direction."

And when you go down to the beaches of the world, especially in warm regions, are you sharing the water with that "tiny" shark?

Nelson says, "Yes."

"It's really amazing how many fish are swimming in the water with you. You have no idea they're there. But they're there. They really are."

(United Press International)

FORCING A SMILE from one of the largest great white sharks ever caught is Bill Rhoades of Los Angeles. The shark is 15 feet, 2 inches long and 2,400 pounds. It will go on display at Marineland of the Pacific.

Wilderness still is paradise

The earth is receiving a goodnight kiss from the sun, causing the sky to blush like a girl after her first game of spin the bottle.

But standing waist-deep in a cool trout stream in Watersmeet, Mich., I am more interested in the swirls of brookies rising to suck in the evening hatch.

None of the rising fish appear to be very big, but a local expert has assured me that with darkness lunker German browns will begin cruising the area.

"The Michigan Hooper and Royal Coachman are the two main flies I use around here," the local expert said while pointing me in the direction of good fly-fishing water.

I am using an eight-foot impregnated bamboo Cortland fly rod that weighs only three and a quarter ounces. Double taper No. 5 weight fly line fills a matching Cortland reel. The water calls for a line that will set the fly down smoothly enough not to disturb the fish.

Following the local expert's advice, I tie a No. 12 Royal Coachman to a leader tapered to two-pound test. In my fly box are big homemade hair-winged Coachmen that the local tied while winter winds iced the countryside. When the German browns begin moving, those flies will come out of the box, and I will change to a heavier leader.

There is no need for lengthy casts in this area since the base of the pool is only 30 feet long and 20 feet wide. There is no breeze to hinder casting, and the fly touches down as lightly as a real insect not far from where I had planned.

The dry fly rides high and proper with the current, drifting toward a brookie on its feeding station. The trout rises without hesitation, duped by the man-made bug.

I react quickly and set the hook, and the eight-inch trout struggles like a wild horse caught in a lasso. Despite its size, the trout fights with every ounce of strength it can muster. When it has weakened enough, I land it and place it in my fishing creel on a bed of leaves and grass.

It doesn't take long for the other trout to forget the commotion and begin feeding again. I start to plan my presentation for the next fish when a loud splash startles me. Swinging around, I come nearly face to face with a deer.

The doe and I exchange looks, and her dark eyes seem to laugh at me. There is no fear in them, only a hint of curiosity. Soon she becomes bored with the game and dips her nose into the water, coming up with a mouthful of waterplants.

I continue fishing, catching another trout almost immediately. It is about the same size as the first one. A third trout also takes the fly, then a fourth.

I occasionally glance over my shoulder to see if the doe is still there. She glances back, but goes on with her feeding. The sky barely shows a blush now, and the mosquitoes have passed the word about me. They begin zeroing in, taking advantage of unprotected flesh.

In my eagerness to begin fishing, I had forgotten to apply bug dope. It was still in the car.

Finally I yield — telling myself I caught enough fish for the next day's breakfast — and wade from the stream with the mosquitoes in pursuit.

The doe stops chewing water plants long enough to watch me climb the bank.

Although I was there first, somehow it seems right that I should leave before her.

Park Ridge family enjoys economical 3-day trip

With gasoline costs rising and inflation taking a bigger bite out of the family budget for the necessities of life, Chicagoland families are looking for economical vacation and weekend enjoyment not too far from home. Some are finding camping trips to fun locations the answer.

The Gary Oswald family of Park Ridge recently took a weekend camping trip to Six Flags Over Mid-America, the amusement park near St. Louis, and spent just $116.86 for the trip! (See box).

They enjoyed many of the 81 different rides, shows, and attractions including celebrity entertainment, and found that discount tickets provide real recreational economy for family visitors. The Oswalds camped at Top-Notch Camp Resort, which is adjacent to the park and is one of eight campgrounds in the Six Flags Over Mid-America area.

Oswald, a 33-year-old electrician, his wife, Emily, and their two daughters, Jennifer, 9, and Christa, 5, made their weekend fun trip in their 22-ft. motor home. They covered the 375 miles from Park Ridge to Six Flags in about seven hours, following route I-55 to St. Louis and connecting there with I-44, which took them directly to the park some 20 miles west of the city. They arrived at the campgrounds early on a Friday evening.

The Top-Notch Camp Resort where the Oswalds hooked up for their weekend stay has a swimming pool, playground, evening movies with cartoons and for those who wish, shuttle-bus service to Six Flags, in addition to the water and electrical services for motor homes.

On Saturday morning, the Oswalds arrived at Six Flags shortly after the park's 10 a.m. opening and spent $34 for two two-day tickets for adults ($9.75 each and for children ($7.75 each). The single admission prices let them enjoy all the attractions in the park as often as they wished. Parking lot attendants directed them to a special motorhome parking area near the gate. Although close to the entrance, the family waited a minute or two so the children could ride a shuttle train around the lot and to the main gate. Shuttle trains circle continuously through the huge parking area, delivering visitors from parked vehicles directly to the main entrance.

Their children were no sooner in the park than they met their TV favorites, H. R. Pufnstuf and friends, comic cops Cling & Clang and Ludicrous Lion. The Pufnstuf crowd tours the park greeting visitors and performing impromptu slapstick pantomine routines to delight the children.

First on the Oswald family agenda was the Moon Ride, where the girls received their first driving lessons from Dad aboard an authentic replica of a 1903 Moon automobile, originally manufactured in St. Louis around the turn of the century.

Next, the Oswalds splashed down the Hoo-Hoo, which reproduces the excitement of loggers chuting through a log flume and down into the rapids beneath. For a change of pace, they visited the Pet-A-Pet animal farm, where Jenny and Chris found another crew of cuddly friends to feed: Calves, piglets, kids, llamas and other domestic young animals.

For an overall tour of the park, the family rode a colorful, authentic replica of a 19th-century steam locomotive with open passenger cars, which circles around and through the park. "There's so much to see and do here," said Emily, "that I'm glad we reserved a weekend. It'll take two days to see everything."

After enjoying lunch at one of the park's many restaurants and fast-food shops, the family visited the Krofft Family Theatre for "Footlight Frolics '75," this year's new puppet show . . . rode the River King Mine Train (a roller coaster named after Illinois' largest coal mine across the river) . . . and got a bird's-eye view of Six Flags from the Sky Way, which soars high across the entire park. They visited the Palace Theatre for a performance of "Juke Box Jubilee," a musical tour of hit tunes from the 1940s through the present day and one of eight new park shows for 1975.

The following morning, after several turns around the 60 year-old Carousel, the children attended "Aqua Frolics '75," a new dolphin and seal show — one of the few inland acquatic reviews of its kind — where trainer Kathy Sims invited them on stage to meet the performers personally. After browsing through several shops and arcades (T-shirts for the girls), they visited "Adventures on the Mississippi" where visitors are attacked by Indians, caught in the crossfire, then fired on by a frontier fort.

Finally, before heading back toward Chicago, the Oswalds stopped at Miss Kitty's Saloon to see the Gay Nineties back-room-piano variety show. All of the performers as well as most of the park's employees are young people of college age.

"We were impressed by the cleanliness of the park," said Gary, referring to the crews of young men who continually roam with brooms and dustpans.

Expense log for weekend at Six Flags

- Gasoline (750-mile round trip with motor home avg. 9.4 mpg) $47.90
- Tolls 1.80
- Campground Rental (Two nights) 10.00
- Six Flags Tickets (two-day rate) 2 adults @ $9.75 ea. and 2 children @ $7.75 ea. 34.00
- *Lunches at Six Flags (Two) 12.00
- Miscellaneous Firewood at campground, games, cotton candy, etc. souvenir T-shirts for girls 11.16
- Total Weekend Expenses $116.86

*(Since meals prepared in the motor home and at the camp site cost no more than meals the family would ordinarily have eaten at home, only restaurant meals are included in expenses listed above.)

Grass field

DENVER (UPI) — The Denver Bears of the American Association play their home games on the only grass field ever used for organized professional baseball. Except for small areas around each base, the entire field at Mile High Stadium is grass. The Bears share the facility with pro football's Denver Broncos.

Poplar Creek hosts tennis challenge

The Northwestern sectional, one of 16 such tournaments across the country in the Equitable Family Tennis Challenge, will be held at 1 p.m. today at the Poplar Creek Racquet Club in Hoffman Estates.

The Equitable Family Tennis Challenge is a nationwide amateur competition sponsored by the Equitable Life Assurance Society of the United States.

In the sectional semifinal matches, Donald Aries and his daughter Jane of Northfield, Ill., will oppose Mrs. Barbara Davidson and her son Michael of Milwaukee, Wis., while George Tesar and daughter Lisa of St. Paul, Minn., will face James T. Horan and daughter Betty Sue of Rochester, Minn.

Mrs. Davidson, the former Barbara Scofield, was a ranked amateur star in the 1950's and was once rated fifth amongst the world's women players.

The two semifinal winners will meet in a third match for the sectional championship and the right to advance to the National Finals of the Equitable Family Tennis Challenge at the West Side Tennis Club in Forest Hills, N.Y., during the U.S. Open Championships.

In addition to the berth in the finals at Forest Hills, the winning team will earn a trophy emblematic of their sectional victory and the runners-up will also receive a trophy award.

The winners in the sectional tournament were produced by competition in four of the 64 local-area rounds across the nation.

The Equitable Family Tennis Challenge was open to any mixed combination from the same family which would then compete against similar amateur teams. A series of draws were established in 64 areas across the country with the cooperation of the United States Tennis Association (formerly U.S.L.T.A.) and competition began nearly six weeks ago in some areas to determine winners for advancement to the sectionals.

The sixteen sectional-winning teams earn the right to compete in the National Finals of the Equitable Family Tennis Challenge at Forest Hills' West Side Tennis Club on Sept. 5 and 6 during the U.S. Open championships. These teams will be provided with transportation and accommodations by The Equitable for their trip to the finals in New York.

Preliminary-round winners and runners-up received trophies consistent with amateur regulations.

Blanchard's eagle tops play in Chemplex league

Rick Blanchard, a C-Flighter and member of team No. 7, fired his first eagle on the par four, eighth hole, using his nine iron for that perfect 90-yard chip.

This is Blanchard's first year in the Chemplex Twilight Golf League which plays weekly at Bonnie Dundee.

Blanchard's entire team (including Jack Jacobs, Tom Krigas and Jim Donato) did well, taking 11 points for the 13th round to capture first place.

Team No. 5, the former frontrunners of Larry Dowd, Elmer Olson, Hank Gudrian and Bob Herigodt was knocked down to third place.

Team No. 3 of Eric Jannasch, Chuck Green, Jack Monteleone and Dave Schull moved from fourth to second place, leaving a mere three-point span between the first three teams going into the final round.

Three birdies were recorded for the evening, two on the eighth hole by Krigas and Jannasch and at the fourth hole by Herigodt.

Jannasch tied his season record for low gross with another 37 while Chuck Van Dever captured low net for the third consecutive week with a 31 (61-30).

However, season low net honors still belong to Herigodt with his 27.

Flight leaders for the second half are Ray Cameron in flight A, Howard Grimmett in flight B, Gudrian in flight C and Donato in flight D.

TWA fights CAB move for more charter flights

by United Press International

The Civil Aeronautics Board Friday announced creation of two new types of low-cost charter flights, saying both would provide tickets and hotel accommodations at prices approaching present ticket costs alone.

At least one major U. S. airline, Trans World Airlines, immediately challenged the action in a federal court suit.

The order, which takes effect Sept. 13 and will continue through March 15, 1980, comes at a time when recession and inflation have cut air travel sharply and when the CAB has been accused of protecting the airlines at the expense of the public.

"What we are trying to do is not divert any travelers from scheduled air transportation, but to make available new, low-cost air transportation to the public," a CAB spokesman said.

BUT TWA, WHICH flies both domestic and foreign routes and is in serious financial trouble caused partly by the challenge of charter travel, filed suit against the CAB in the U. S. Court of Appeals in New York less than 30 minutes after the board announced its action.

"We're challenging it on the basis that the CAB exceeded its authority in approving it," said a TWA spokesman in Washington. "We feel they didn't have authority to do any of what they did."

The board itself said in its order that the two new types of charter travel "will be of substantial benefit to the public and will provide an important outlet for the ever-increasing demand for low-cost bulk air transportation."

Dixon leads Walker in voter poll

the early poor, Dixon backers also believe that the figures can be improved.

Another factor which Dixon backers find significant is the amount of "don't know" responses in the job-approval poll. Asked about Dixon, 39 per cent said they did not know how he had performed in office, and 38 per cent said that of Hartigan. Only 8 per cent were unable to give an opinion regarding Walker.

Dixon hopefuls take that as a sign of name recognition due to Walker's higher public visibility, a factor which can be counteracted in an intensive campaign.

The doctor says

by Lawrence E. Lamb, M.D.

Smoking is not linked to arthritis

Would you kindly discuss the effects of smoking on an arthritic person? I feel there is some sort of link between the two and feel if you confirmed this maybe it would help people give up smoking. I know a woman in her 70s who is bothered with painful arthritis, but while complaining about it continues with her cigaretes.

Cigarets are associated with a lot of ills, but there is no evidence that they cause or make arthritis worse.

There is some evidence that patients with rheumatoid arthritis are particularly prone to develop lung disease from smoking, much more so than the average smoker and that is bad enough already.

I am so angry at myself for being so dumb. I had two gall bladder attacks, so I called my obstetrician. He is the only doctor I have had since my only problem has been having six babies. He sent me to a friend of his, an internist. I had tests, and three days later he said the radiologist's report said I had gall stones, and should go see a surgeon. He sent me to a surgeon friend of his because he doesn't operate.

Now why didn't I know that and go to a surgeon in the first place? I suppose all this running around is so everybody can get a bite out of my Blue Cross Blue Shield? I want you to tell me which of the following list of specialists do surgery and which ones don't, for future use.

Forgive me for not including your list, but you are using poor judgment.

Think how angry you would be with yourself if you had gone to a surgeon and found out that your problem was not gall bladder disease. Then you would have seen a surgeon for no reason at all and would still have the problem which would require an internist.

Your obstetrician was right in sending you to an internist first. The diagnosis could have been several different things, including an ulcer or hiatal hernia or colon problems. The internist has to hear the symptoms and do an examination to make a correct diagnosis. The x-rays help, but many people have stones and have symptoms from something else, such as a spastic colon.

Except in those small communities where the surgeon does family practice as well as some surgery, I recommend that all patients see their family physician first or an internist before seeing a surgeon. The exception is for injuries, as from an automobile accident, that are of such a nature as to require a surgeon.

A good surgeon really is too busy to sort through all the medical complaints that may not require surgery at all. That is why he limits his practice to surgery. A surgeon who is too enthusiastic about surgery, and there are some, often has his enthusiasm controlled by the internist who doesn't do surgery.

Finally, many patients who require surgery also have medical problems that need the skills of the family physician or the internist, in addition to surgery.

'Ride 'em cowboy . . .'

Staying alive and out of the hospital can depend on a man's ability to stay seated on bronco or bull

by KAREN BLECHA

The rodeo arena is silent. Quiet, like the lull before a big storm. The white metal chutes, Nos. 1 through 5, stand empty at the north end of the ring. The arena is not a big one, maybe 50 feet at its widest, but then it doesn't take much room for a bronc to buck or a bull to spin or a cowboy to get killed.

The stockmen are busy in pens behind the chutes, separating bulls from calves, saddle broncs from those that will be ridden bareback. The bulls look as unperturbed as though they were in their home pens back at the farm. But that's the way they look now; there are no cowboys on their backs. In the ring, it will be a different story.

In several hours, cowboys will compete in the matinee performance of the Latting-Burkholder rodeo at the Kane County Fair near St. Charles. They will come from all over the country, from Modesto, Calif. and Okechobee, Fla., to compete in five events: bareback bronc riding, saddle bronc riding, bull riding, steer wrestling and calf roping.

They will pay $20 per entry and will be guaranteed nothing. If they are lucky — and most of them will not be — they will win $300 or $400. The rodeo, for professionals only, is just another step on the International Rodeo Assn. circuit. Today, St. Charles. Tomorrow, Dodson, Mont.

IT HAS BEEN raining all morning, just like it did last year. Cowboys walk the grounds, pensive as they wade through ankle-deep mud to check the stock and get a look at the bulls and broncs they have drawn. Winning in rodeo is as much the luck of the draw as anything else. A cowboy is scored on how hard the animal bucks as well as how he rides, so he wants a good bucker, the rankest piece of stock he can get. And what he gets depends on numbers pulled out of a hat.

There are no crowds in the stands yet. In an hour or so they will begin to filter in, taking the dry seats under the tarp. Only a few will be true rodeo fans. Rodeo does not draw like football.

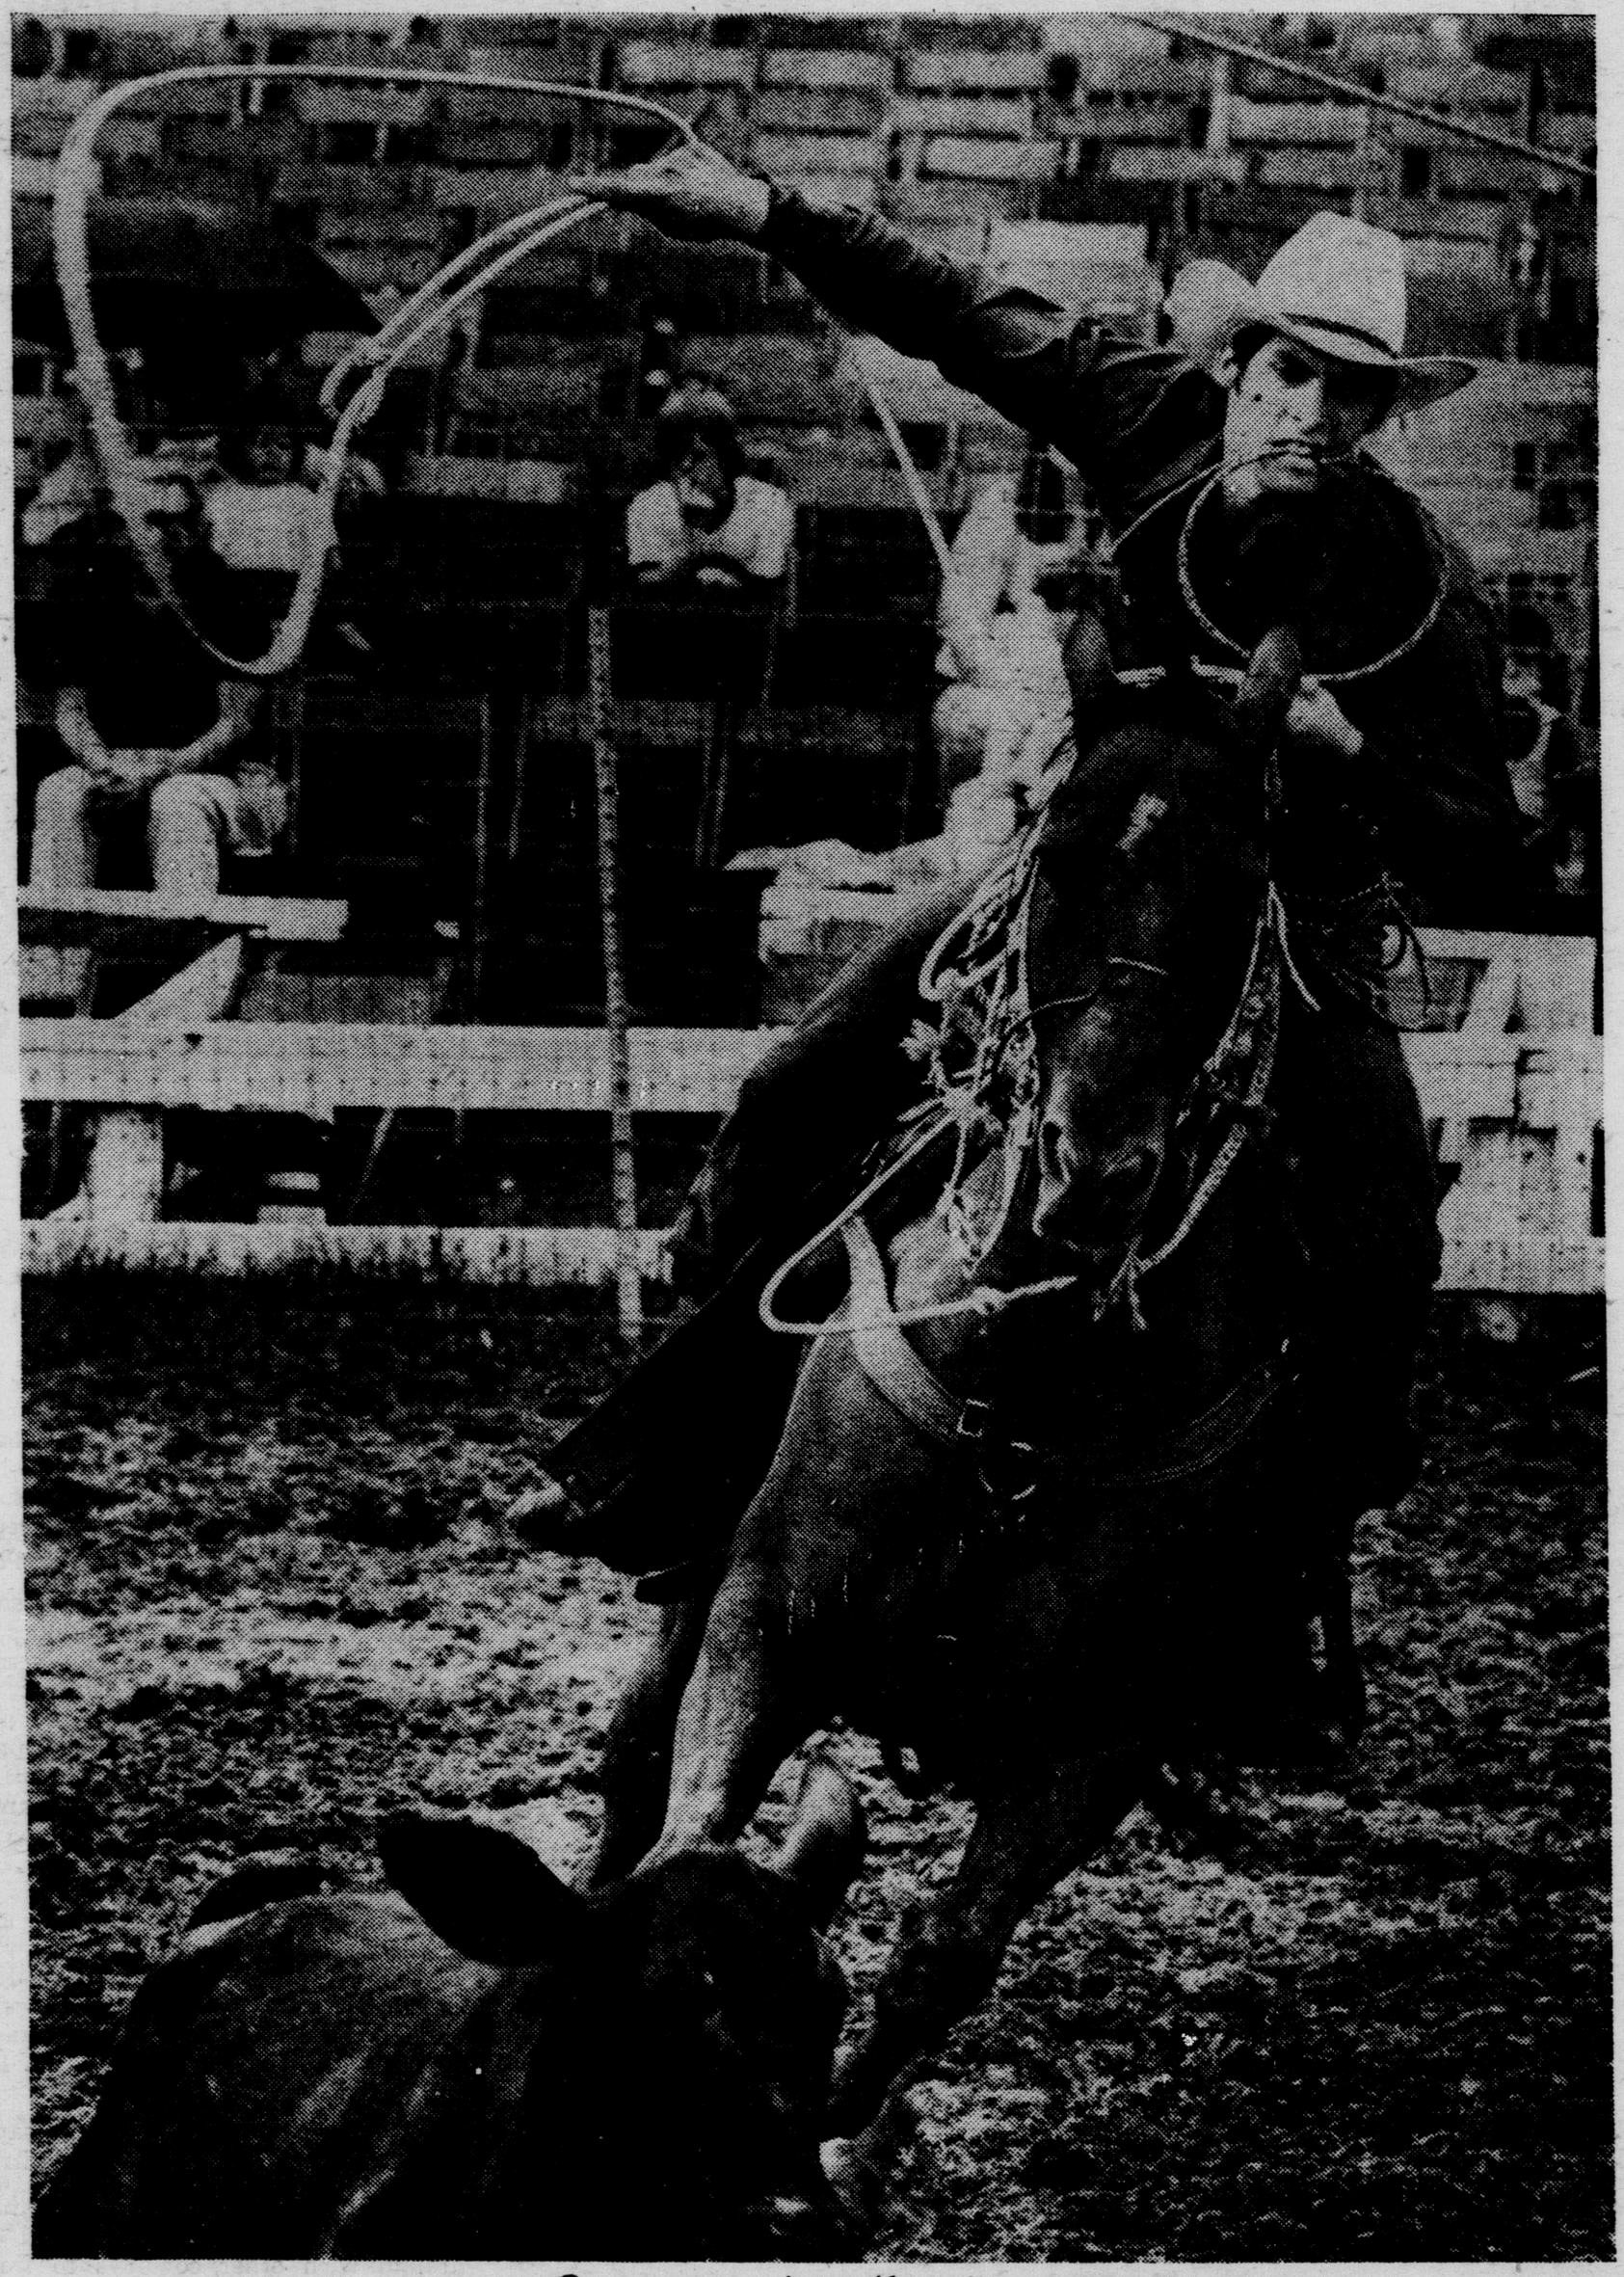

Most will be farmers and suburbanites who want to sample the flavor of the West, maybe even see someone get hurt. A cowboy will fall under his bull, get his chest imprinted with thrashing hooves and some will be satisfied. But that is later. Now the audience is still busy on the Midway, looking at prize-winning chickens and paying their quarters at The Congress of Oddities.

FORTY MINUTES before the Grand Entry — the grand march of rodeo — and John Stewart arrives, setting his red gear bag on a platform behind the chutes. This is his second rodeo of the season. He has just driven from his house in Arlington Heights with his wife and a friend. His three-month-old daughter is at home with a sitter.

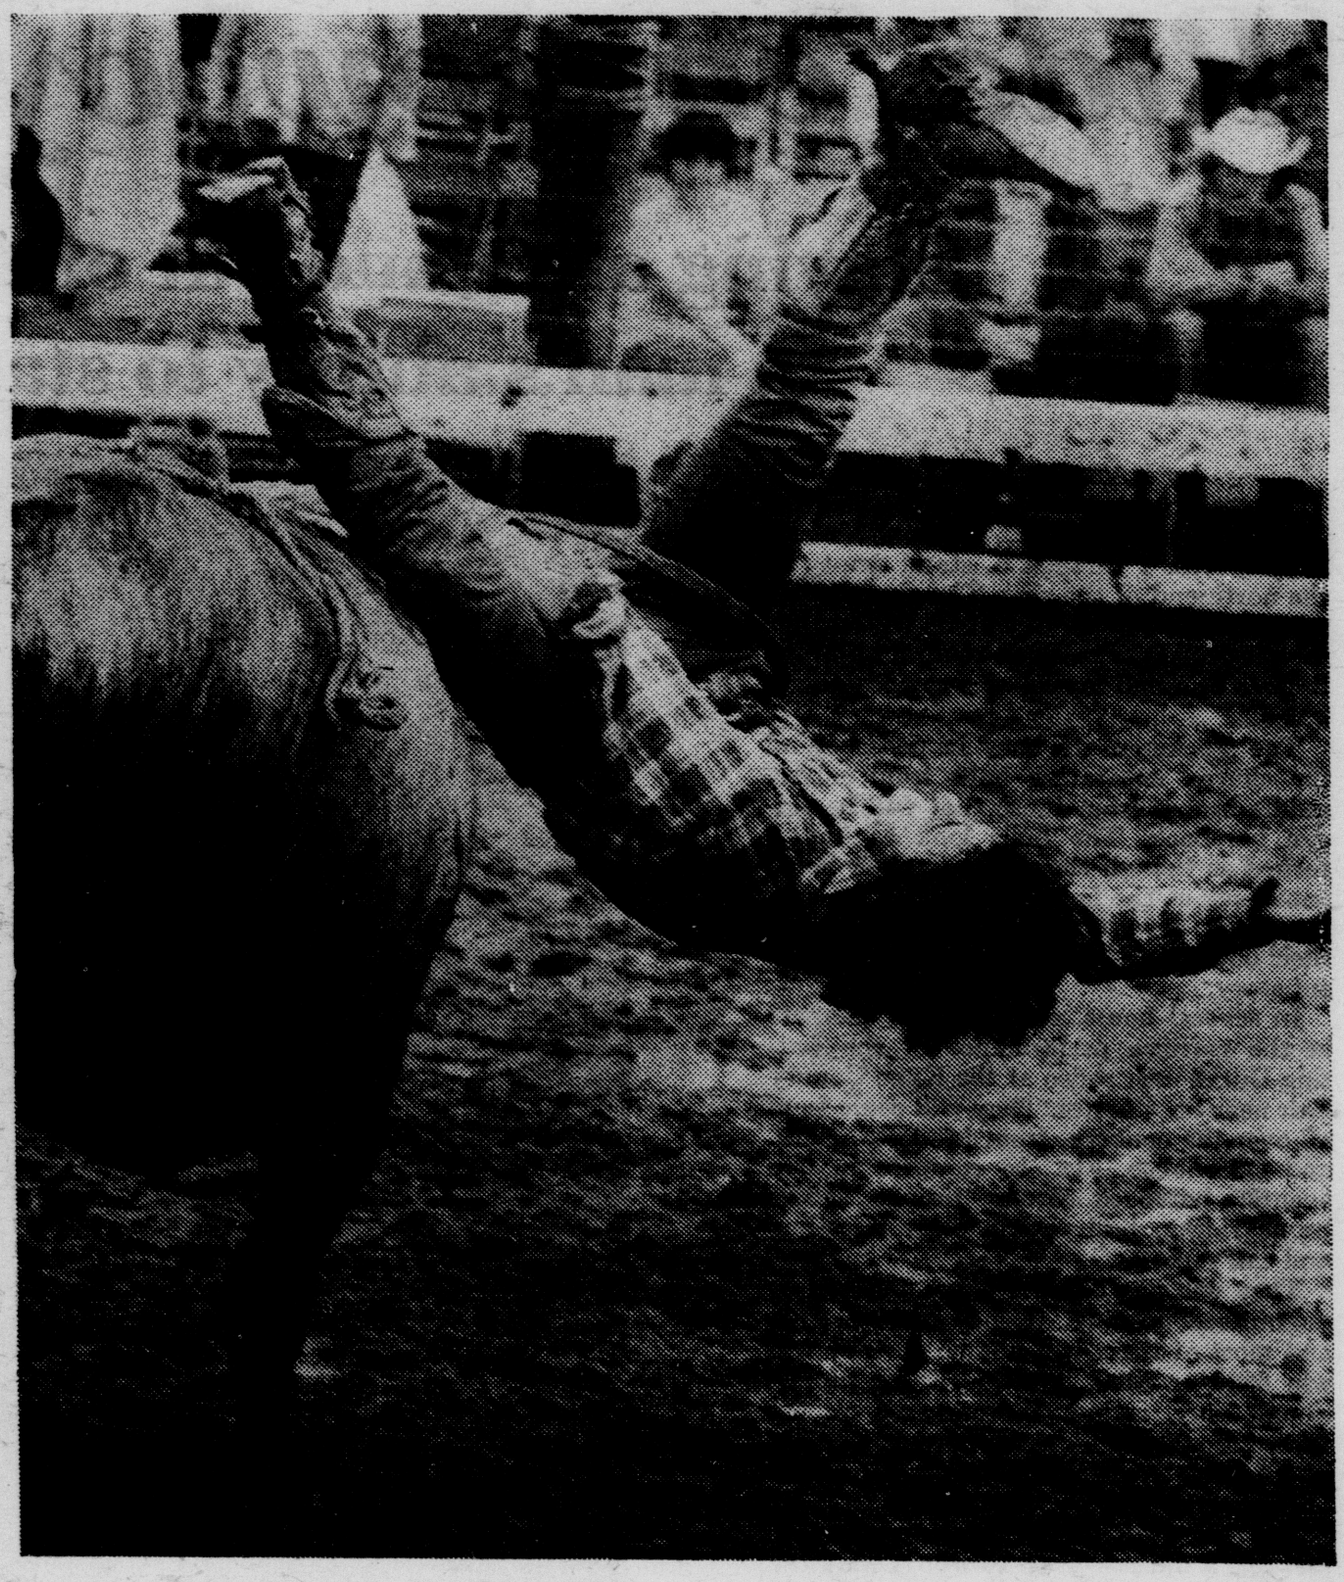

Inside the gear bag is rigging for Stewart's two events, bareback bronc riding and bull riding. They are the two toughest events and three weeks ago in Wauconda he bucked off them both. Last year in the mud at Kane County he "whistled up" — stayed the required eight seconds on his bronc — but didn't win any prize money.

He's 28 and for half those years has been riding rodeo stock. As an 18-year-old from Deming, N.M., he tried it for a living for a couple of years but got tired of sleeping in cars, eating crackers and stealing apples.

Now he works for a computer software company — a good job — and does rodeos part-time, about 10 a year. He doesn't win much money. Last year he lost money with the price of entry fees and all. It's hard when you don't get the practice. Your timing and reflexes are off, your body out of shape. But Stewart can't stay away. The thrill, the challenge, something he can't explain, keep bringing him back.

WITH HIS boots and stirrups already on, he walks over to check the draw taped to the window of a Dodge van. He has drawn Bronc No. 101 and isn't happy. He could have telephoned for the draw last night and now he's glad he didn't. He has a tough ride ahead.

"I've been on him before," he says quietly. "He's very strong and very dirty."

The bull he has drawn is 5H which he knows nothing about. He will check around with other cowboys to find out whether anyone has ridden him before. Cowboys are usually willing to trade stock information. Chances are someone will know if 5H spins hard to the left or bucks three times out of the chute and turns to the right.

Stewart stares at the mud puddles in the ring and frowns. Riding rodeo is messy work anyway and rain doesn't help. Bulls and broncs tend to slip in the mud.

HE IS OUT in the drizzle, pacing. His 6-foot, 190-pound frame is protected by a green slicker and a stetson. Normally friendly and outgoing, he likes to be alone before a ride. He needs to plan his every move, psyche himself up.

It takes a lot of guts to wrap your legs around an angry horse knowing every bone in your body will be jolted with every buck, and yet you must keep spurring the animal to get a high score.

It takes a lot of guts to get down on a 2,000-pound part-Brahma bull, the meanest bull around, that will spin you dizzy and then gladly rip you to shreds if you fall off and the rodeo clown can't get to him in time.

STEWART'S already broken his ribs and foot, sprained his neck, suffered a concussion and chipped a bone in his shoulder. He has been lucky. Several cowboys die every year doing what he does.

An angry bronc is the real competition

—second ride on the rodeo circuit

"A cowboy must have a positive mental attitude," Stewart said one night under different circumstances, siting calmly in his living room on Hackberry Lane.

"I think everyone is scared to some extent — maybe apprehensive is a better word. Apprehensive about getting bucked off and not having a good ride, not apprehensive about falling off or you will fall off. Like a guy working high steel.

"Riding bulls is a split second thing — one second you're sittin' straight up, the next you're sittin' in the dirt. I try not to watch the cowboy ahead of me. One time in Bakersfield the guy ahead of me fell off. He got kicked in the head and there he was layin' in a pool of blood.

"I glanced at him and every bit of psyche I had built up went right out the gate. I rode out, the bull bucked three times and I fell and broke my foot."

BUT THIS is not Bakersfield. This is St. Charles and Stewart's ride is up. He takes out his chaps (pronounced shaps) which he wears riding broncs because they look flashy, the fringe flying in the wind. They are grey suede with three-leaf clovers and he puts them on over his jeans. As he walks behind the chutes he holds up his chaps like a woman holds up a skirt.

He climbs the chutes and takes his rigging — a piece of leather with handhold that is cinched behind the horse's withers — out of a plastic bag. His eyeglasses are already off. He pulls his glove out of his belt and shakes it out, removing any dirt that might be caught between the fingers. Each move is deliberate, nervous. He doesn't talk and he doesn't smile; he concentrates.

John Stewart

Gently, with the help of another cowboy who shakes the bronc's mane to distract the animal, Stewart settles on the horse. He gives the sign to open the gate and he is out, his stirrups over the horses' shoulders as required when coming out of the chutes.

But something is wrong. The horse moves out of the gate fast, veers to the left and then really starts to buck. Stewart isn't prepared for that. He loses his balance and falls into the dirt before the eight-second horn sounds.

"No time for John Stewart," the announcer blares over the loudspeaker. "Let's give a big hand, ladies and gents, for this cowboy from Arlington Heights." And the audience applauds as Stewart picks up his hat and shakes the mud from it, disappointment all over his face.

BUT HE CAN'T give in to disappointment. He must stayed psyched for his bull ride. About an hour later he repeats the procedure in the chutes, this time carefully winding his bull rope around his hand. It is an important move because a cowboy can get hung up in the rope

They take this ancient game seriously

by JUDY JOBBITT

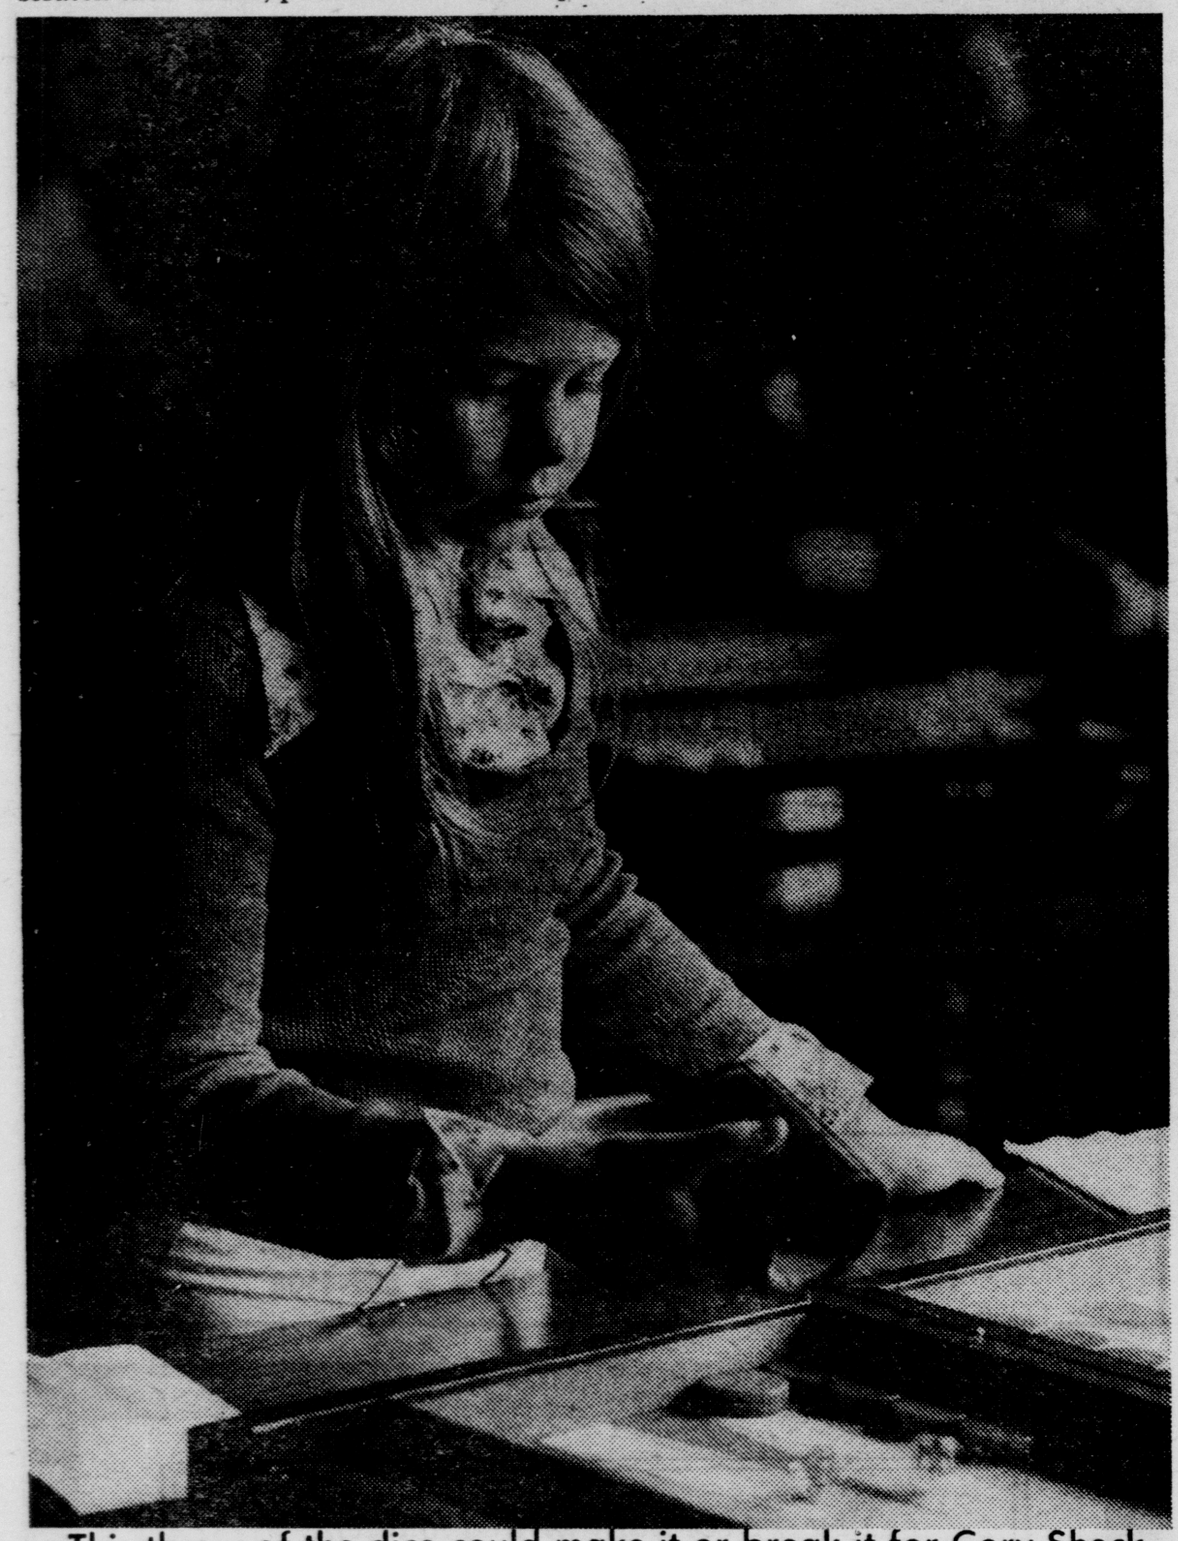

The dice start rolling at 1 p.m. every Saturday at Hackney's Restaurant in Glenview.

The crowd of 5- to 14-year-olds leans over tables covered with backgammon boards to get a better look as they ponder each move. The room smells of french fries — their way of shaking the jitters. They scratch their heads, pull their ears and hop about as they figure out the next play.

The next throw of the dice could make or break the game.

Backgammon knows no age limit. Saturday is tournament day for youngsters from the northwest and northern suburbs when as many as 50 compete in the contests sponsored by the National Backgammon League of Chicago.

THE KIDS are serious about their game. Following a game, plays are analyzed and guesses made about which move made the winner. Good sportsmanship reigns. Losses are accepted with a shrug; wins celebrated with reserve. The next match may break that winning streak since most can't psyche out their opponent's strategies.

This throw of the dice could make it or break it for Cory Sheck.

The special tournament for the younger set was started this summer to meet the kids' needs, said Robert Morton, director.

"We found the kids wanted to play in adult tournaments, and they were pretty good," he said. "Most of the adults could handle being beaten by a youngster, but a few couldn't."

He said directors of the league didn't want kids to pick up bad attitudes or be crushed by the adults' skills. They decided instead to offer them their own tournaments.

It costs $2 each Saturday. An additional $10 fee must be paid by children whose parents do not have a family membership in the NBL.

THE TOURNAMENT has three divisions based on skill. The top division is the masters group where the best players can compete for master's points on the junior level.

Group lessons are offered for those trying their luck at the game for the first time. Special work sessions are conducted by Morton and other adults for youngsters to pick up strategy tips. The youngsters also are eager to teach others.

Simply speaking, the object of the game is to get all your markers off the board or "home" before your opponent. A throw of two dice determines how many moves a marker can make. Skill comes in blocking your opponent so he cannot get home or knocking your opponent's markers off the board so he has to start over.

An element of risk is involved with each throw of the dice. "The role of the dice is

Backgammon clubs abound in area

The number of backgammon enthusiasts in Chicago and suburbs is growing.

Tournaments are scheduled throughout the week by the National Backgammon League which opened its doors just one year ago and already has 12 clubs operting in the Chicago area with 1,800 members.

Family membership in the NBL costs $75. Nonmembers can play in NBL tournaments for $5. Tournaments are offered at these places and times each week:

- Los Amigos Restaurant, 9000 N. Milwaukee Ave., Niles, 8 p.m. Wednesdays.
- Holiday Inn, Edens Expressway and Lake-Cook Road, Northbrook, 7:30 p.m. Mondays.
- Pyrenees Restaurant, 10035 N. Skokie Blvd., Skokie, 8 p.m. Tuesdays. For more information about the NBL contact Arthur Clifton, 338-9216.

The Backgammon Club of Chicago also sponsors tournaments every Tuesday at 8 p.m. at Maxim's de Paris Restaurant, 1300 N. Astor, Chicago. Membership is $150.

Documentary takes you on police patrol

"Cops," a special one-hour documentary showing what happens during the nightly police patrol in a big city high crime district, will be broadcast on Channel 11 at 8 p.m. Friday.

The camera follows a two-man police team during five nights of patroling New York City's Bedford-Stuyvesant district, an area where murder occurs every week and a crime is committed every hour. The officers deal on the spot with robbery, beatings, family squabbles and murder.

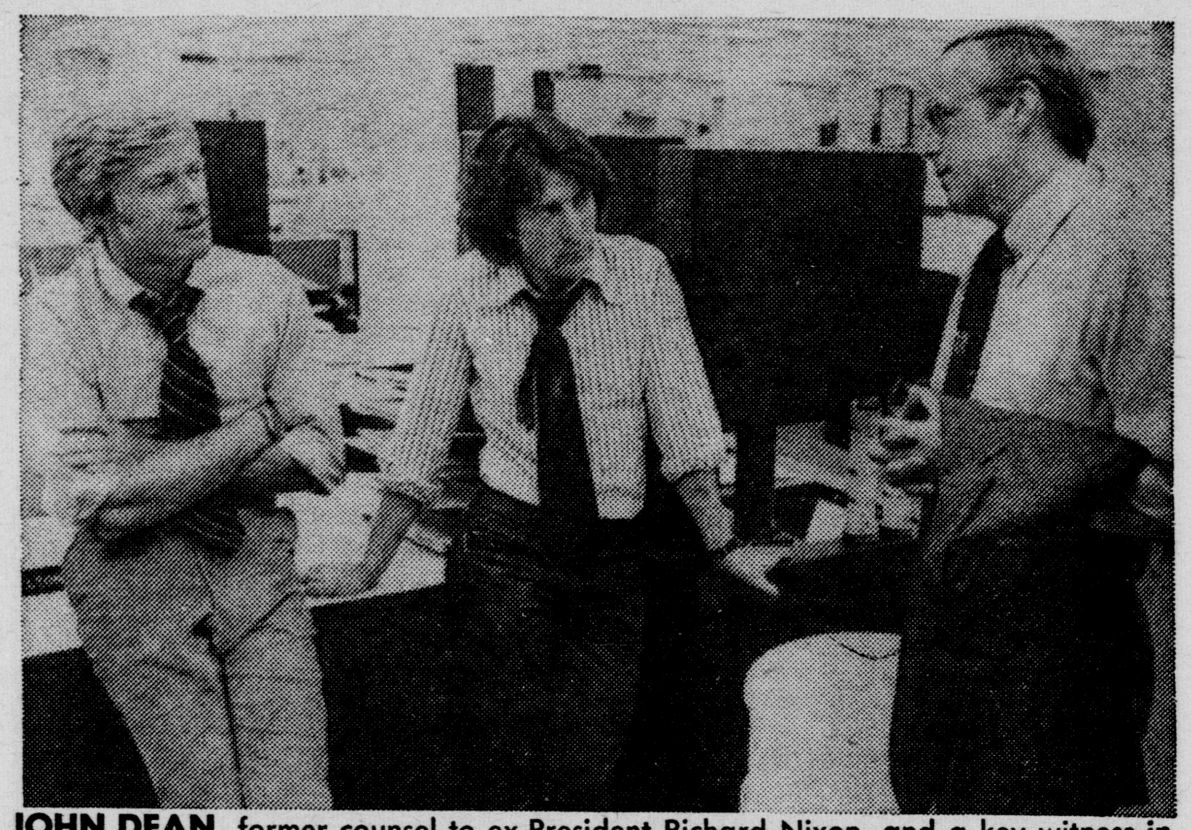

Between patrols the policemen talk about why they joined the force and their disillusionment with light sentences given offenders.

TV series on movies views violence tonight

Hollywood film critic David Sheehan takes on "The Violent Men Of The Movies" in the fifth and final special of the "Backstage In Hollywood" series, tonight at 9 p.m. on Channel 2.

Sheehan conducts interviews with the world's most famous and highest paid movie stars, who have earned their reputations — and their millions — by portraying violent he-men in a wide variety of "actien" movies. Sheehan attempts to explore the attitudes and conscience, or lack of it, that has allowed these stars to be so consistently associated with violent films.

Featured are John Wayne, Clint Eastwood, Kirk Douglas and Charles Bronson, with clips from many of their more violent movies.

JOHN DEAN, former counsel to ex-President Richard Nixon, and a key witness in the Watergate hearing, visits the sound stage at the Burbank studio where Robert Redford and Dustin Hoffman are filming "All the President's Men" for Warner Bros. release.

Closing Hollywood generation gap . . .

NEW YORK (UPI) — Liza Minnelli, Candice Bergen, Jane and Peter Fonda, Beau and Jeff Bridges, Michael Douglas. Hollywood's home-grown stars are more and more in evidence these days.

And the list keeps growing.

The combination of looks, talent, luck and fortitude is what counts, so it's still okay to be born in Winnetka and change your name from Roy Fitzgerald to Rock Hudson. But it helps to hail from Beverly Hills or better yet Bel Air and have a movie star for a parent. At age 11, even Tatum O'Neal knows that.

So does Scott Newman. Paul Newman's eldest offspring and only son was signed up for a bit part in "The Great Waldo Pepper" because the director, George Roy Hill, was an old family friend. That in turn got the 24-year-old aspiring actor a job in dad's picture, "The Towering Inferno," playing a young fireman.

THE HANDSOME Scott, whose mother is actress Jackie Witte, says he has no delusions about inheriting stardom. "I've been making it on my own since I was 20 and I know I have to keep doing it." He recently completed his first starring role — in a Charles Bronson movie called "Breakheart Pass."

One of the prettiest of the new crop is Devon Scott, 16-year-old brown-haired, brown-eyed daughter of George C. Scott by the actor's second marriage.

In her first professional acting chore Devon played a teenage daughter on the short-lived "We'll Get By" television series created by Alan Alda, star of the "MASH" show and son of actor Robert Alda.

CARRIE FISHER seems a natural as the worldly teenager who seduces Warren Beatty in "Shampoo." But would she have been hired if she weren't the daughter of Debbie Reynolds and Eddie Fisher? At 18 she can shrug off such questions. Somebody once asked her what it was like being Debbie's daughter. "Compared to what?" asked Carrie.

Being the daughter of a famed Hollywood star gave a publicity advantage to Taryn Power, raised by her actress mother Linda Christian after father Tyrone's death in 1958. Older sister Romina has found work only in minor European productions, but Taryn, at 21, is trying for Hollywood. She recently completed her first movie there with Dennis Hopper, having already made her American debut with Richard Chamberlain in "The Count of Monte Cristo" for television.

She is now in Spain co-starring with another Hollywood offspring, John Wayne's son Patrick, in "Sinbad and the Eye of the Tiger." Also in the east is Topo Swope, actress daughter of Dorothy McGuire.

Taryn says she always wanted to be an actress and remembers "I pretended having screen tests when I was 5."

NO SUCH DREAMS entered the head of 5-year-old Melanie Griffith who, now nearing 18, says she vaguely remembers meeting Alfred Hitchcock while her mother Tippi Hedren "the new Grace Kelly" was making "The Birds" and "Marnie." Later she collected autographed photos of Charlie Chaplin and Marlon Brando while her mother was working in "The Countess From Hong Kong."

"But I didn't think about being an actress except a few years ago when they talked about my playing the little girl in 'The Exorcist.' By the time they made the movie I was 14 and too old."

Another chance came last year when Ar-

CBS to question Betty Ford on presidency

Betty Ford, the first lady, is the subject of a CBS "60 Minute" interview on Sunday. Among the topics discussed are Mrs. Ford's views on the presidency after being in the White House for one year. Other topics are her role as wife and mother.

Auto industry

The state of the U.S. automobile industry will be the subject of an ABC News "Closeup" Friday.

ABC will look at the whys and wherefores behind the economic slump that has affected the once mighty auto industry. One of the key elements of the 60-minute show will be how the car business responds to the fuel crisis and the demand for smaller cars.

Documentary on

On Thursday ABC will air its documentary "Americans All: Black Business," a study in the achievements of black businessmen and where they are heading. On the same night, "Geraldo Rivera: Good Night America," will devote itself to the rise of the homosexual life style in this country.

The full-time cowboy travels many miles to make it pay

when he falls and be dragged by the bull.

Stewart's bull ride is no better. Out of the chutes and he is again bucked to the ground before the horn. "I looked at the guy who rode him before me and he didn't look nearly as strong," is all he says when it's over and he's winding up his bull rope, getting ready to go home.

There will be other rodeos. Maybe Glenview in late August. Galena in September. There's plenty of time left; the season doesn't end until December. Stewart is still looking to meet up with his favorite bull, Tarzan from Colorado, the bull who broke his ribs. And besides, sometimes it's the ride, not the score, a cowboy remembers.

"I'll never forget riding in Madison Square Garden. It was the best," Stewart had said. "Hell, I got bucked off three bulls and got my shoulder hurt. But it was worth it . . . just to be there."

RON MARTIN, now 30 and getting to be an old man in the young sport of rodeo, has been to Madison Square Garden and back.

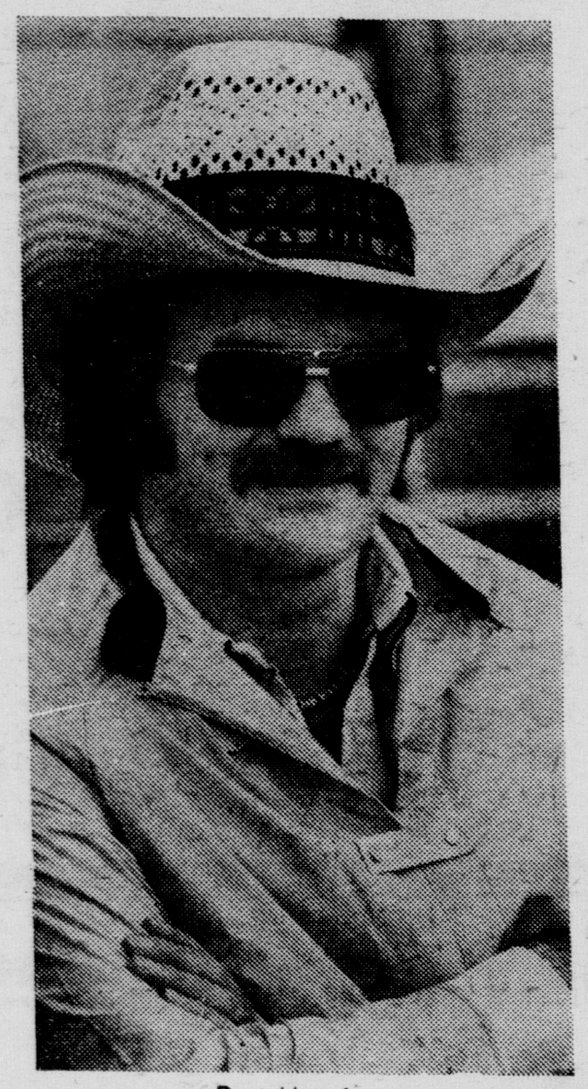

He is an example of another side of rodeo: the cowboy who does it for a living, chalking up more than 100,000 miles a year, squeezing in as many performances as he can. He is one of the few who make money at it and has been rodeoing since he was 15, a kid from Cicero. His dad was a jockey.

Today he is at the Kane County Fair rodeo, watching. His event is bareback broncs but he isn't riding. He injured his ankle and foot a few weeks back and the doctor says it will be at least another week before he rodeos again.

THE INJURY was a bad break for Martin. It's blown his chances for the IRA's world championships in bareback bronc riding. The championship is given to the cowboy who wins the most money in a season, and if you stop rodeoing for a month you lose a lot of money. Martin has never won the championship; once he came up $6 short.

"In a year I can make more than $30,000 or I can make $2,000," Martin says. "It all depends on how much you're injured, how lucky you are and how well you ride."

Martin's life is a tough one, strenuous and expensive. The object is to compete in as many rodeos as possible, and that takes travel money. A week's rodeo schedule can look like a month's vacation trip: Idabel, Okla.; Salem, Mo.; East Moline, Ill.; Farmington, Mich. Saturday afternoon; Grayslake, Il. Saturday night; and Pulaski, Va. on Sunday.

Ron Martin

DURING THE season he is busy seven days a week. Monday he sleeps, Tuesday he is on the telephone like hundreds of other cowboys trying to get an open line to enter rodeos for the rest of the week; Wednesday he is at a rodeo or driving to one; Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday he competes. And in between events — whether he is at an airport or in a phone booth in some God-forsaken town — he is calling to enter more rodeos down the line.

There is barely a break in the season. There are no rodeos in December but cowboys spend that month getting in shape for the week-long IRA finals in January. There the top 15 money winners in each event will compete in the rankest stock available.

The IRA and Rodeo Cowboy's Assn. are to rodeo what the NFL and WFL are to football. Martin is one of eight directors of the IRA, elected by the 3,500 member cowboys.

THE IRA, basically a cowboy's union, has done a lot to clean up the cowboy's image although television, movies and audiences seem reluctant to accept the change. The IRA prints a 60-page rule book and cowboys are fined for infractions, from leaving bad debts in rodeo towns to cussing out rodeo judges.

Martin is proud of his sport, but he seems bitter so few are fans. He wonders why television does not schedule more rodeos and why the sport does not draw more spectators. Yet he is optimistic.

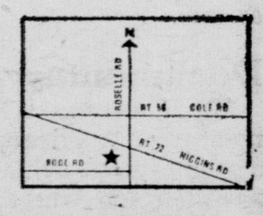

"I think someday this sport will be big like baseball," he says. "But it sure won't be in my time."

the luck — the chance — factor," said Morton. "What you do with those throws is the skill factor."

FOUR GIRLS from Harmony Village in Wheeling came to test their skills on a recent Saturday. They said they started playing the game a year ago when their parents became avid fans. Now they are obsessed and play whenever they can.

"In Harmony Village it seems like everybody knows how to play," said Lee Goodman, 12. She said several families sometimes get together and conduct their own tournaments.

Amy Weiss, 13, said they decided to join the Saturday group because they wanted to find new competition.

"You have to use a lot more strategy here than when you're playing with your friends," said Lee. "You have to do your best because you don't know how good your opponent is."

THEIR FRIEND, Cory Sheck, 9, said she felt pretty good after the day's competition. She competed in the youngest division and only lost to a seven-year-old "who beat everybody he played." She said, "I'm going to come back next week no matter what. It's fun."

At 4 p.m. the games are totaled and trophies awarded. One week, a 10-year-old defeated a 14-year-old for the master's trophy and a seven-year-old took home the junior trophy after his first try in the tournament.

Despite the tournaments' completion, the crowd was reluctant to call it a day. Parents stopping by to pick up their children were drawn into the room and started to play. An empty backgammon board couldn't be found.

But the fans eventually had to go home until the next week when the youngsters would have another crack at that tournament prize.

Backgammon fever hits area, play in clubs, with friends

For information ccontact Valerie Valentine, 782-0142.

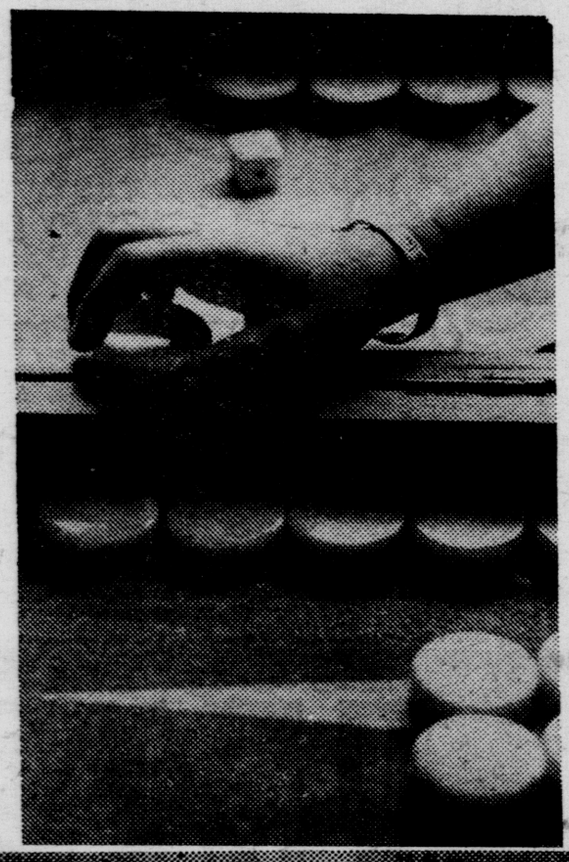

Backgammon doesn't have to be played at official tournaments. The game can become a family past-time. Flip over the old checker board, and chances are you'll find a backgammon board on the reverse side.

DESPITE THE game's growing popularity, backgammon sets can be difficult to find. Many stores only stock sets during the holiday season while other stores carry only the special and more expensive sets during December.

Sets can be bought for as little as $3 at Marshall Field and Co. in the children's game department. Salesmen say most adults buy sets costing about $25 although the store has a $250 leather set which includes a leather case, board and dice cup.

Sears, Roebuck and Co. carries a Milton-Bradley set for $7.99 and has the more expensive variety at Christmas.

Abercrombie and Fitch Co. salesmen say their most popular set costs $50 and has a cork board inside a pressed vinyl carrying case. They also carry a $300 leather set which folds up into an attache-style case.

Stars' kids follow parents, make it on their own

thur Penn cast Melanie as a run-away teenager in Gene Hackman's "Night Moves." She has since done "Smile" about a California beauty contest with Bruce Dern and has a starring role with Paul Newman and Joanne Woodward in "The Drowning Pool."

IF THE NAME Carradine is heard a lot around Hollywood these days it is not only because John Carradine's sone David is the head guru of TV's "Kung Fu." Keith Carradine, 13 years younger, now seems to have emerged as a star with his sixth picture, Robert Altman's "Nashville," for which he also composed and performed two principal songs.

Having a movie star for a parent opens doors in Hollywood. Keeping them open long enough to establish a career is harder.

Robert Mitchum's sons Jim and Christopher, both past 30, are still struggling movie actors rather than stars. Of Burt Lancaster's five children, only son William has so far shown interest in films. But after working with his father in the six-part TV series "Moses, the Lawgiver," Bill Lancaster already has declared he is quitting acting for a career in screen-writing. He recently sold his first script.

JOHN WAYNE'S son Michael keeps his hand in the family business by managing his father's Batjak production company and producing his dad's movies, leaving the second-generation acting to younger brother, 36. After years of secondary roles, Pat Wayne finally may be catching on. Besides starring in the new "Sinbad" picture, he recently got star billing in Disney's "The Bears and I."

The long-climb-to-the-top process may have been reversed by Desi Arnaz Jr. Lucille Ball's son, a juvenile star with sister Lucie on their mother's marathon TV series, made his movie debut in a well-received picture, "Red Sky At Morning," a few years ago. But "Billy Two Hats," a western with Gregory Peck, was a box office flop. And "Marco," a lavish musical filmed in Japan three years ago with Desi as Marco Polo, has not been released. Desi hasn't made a movie since.

Sister Lucie, who recently made her dramatic debut in a TV movie based on the famed Los Angeles Black Dahlia murder case, may be the one to carry on the Ball-Arnaz tradition.

THE SECOND generation actors and actresses are increasingly spotted in the credits of movies and TV shows.

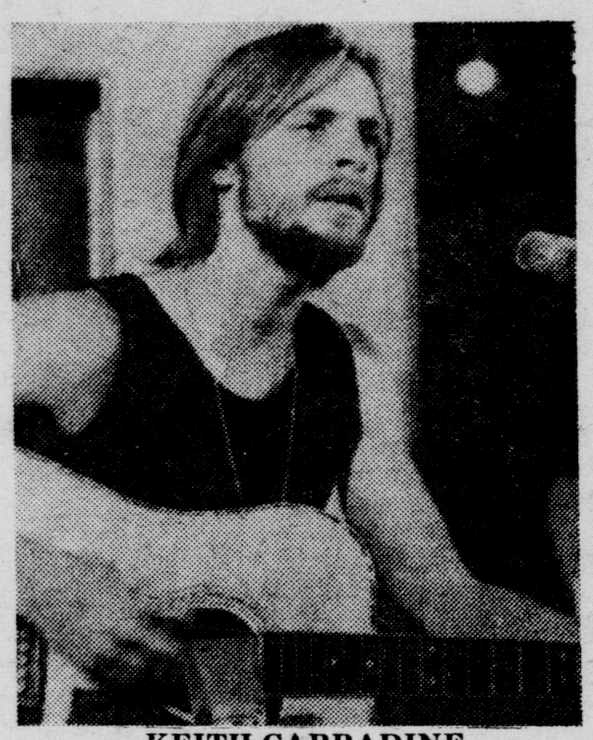

James Daly, costar of TV's "Medical Center," is the father of Tyne Daly whose credits include a number of recent TV movies. Television also has provided roles for Maureen Reagan, daughter of Jane Wyman and ex-actor, ex-California governor Ronald Reagan; Gavin O'Herlighy, son of Dan; Dirk Blocker, son of Dan; and Robert Walker Jr. whose mother is Jennifer Jones.

Nepotism is an evident in the acting game as elsewhere. Martin Milner and Kent McCord of "Adam-12" have given their teen-age daughters Amy and Kristen guest roles on the weekly series.

Robert Conrad did the same for daughter Nancy while filming his "Assignment: Vienna" series. The 21-year-old Nancy Conrad has since played her father's daughter in a movie awaiting release and plans to make a career of acting.

Older daughter Joan wants no part of show business. "I got Joan to appear in a party scene but she hated the work so much she wouldn't come back the next day to finish it," says Conrad. "She said she had better things to do than sit around a hot set all day."

Joan Conrad isn't the only movie brat not inspired to follow the lead of a famous parent. Shirley MacLaine says daughter Stephanie "wants nothing to do with show business. She considers it a colossal invasion of privacy. And a big bore."

Jackson's puppets brighten TV for kids

by LINDA PUNCH

Bill Jackson walks onto the set with his alter ego Dirty Dragon lying lifeless in his arms.

It is 8:30 p.m. on a Friday night and Jackson is preparing to tape an episode of WLS-TV's "B.J.'s Gigglesnort Hotel." He tosses a few jokes at the cameramen as he blocks out the upcoming bit — the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet. The blonde actress playing Juliet strolls onto the balcony and Dirty Dragon suddenly leaps to life. "Gottcha girlie, ma, ha, ha, ha, ha . . ."

Jackson, a resident of Arlington Heights, is familiar to most children as B.J., desk clerk of the Gigglesnort Hotel. He has made a career of bringing to life characters as diverse as sweet Mother Plumtree and the irascible dragon.

"I wanted to do something fun — to do a little something out of your ear," Jackson said, adding that children's shows are the only local programs "that have creativity."

"Every once in a while there's a local documentary or special but heaven forbid if you tried to make a living doing that," he said.

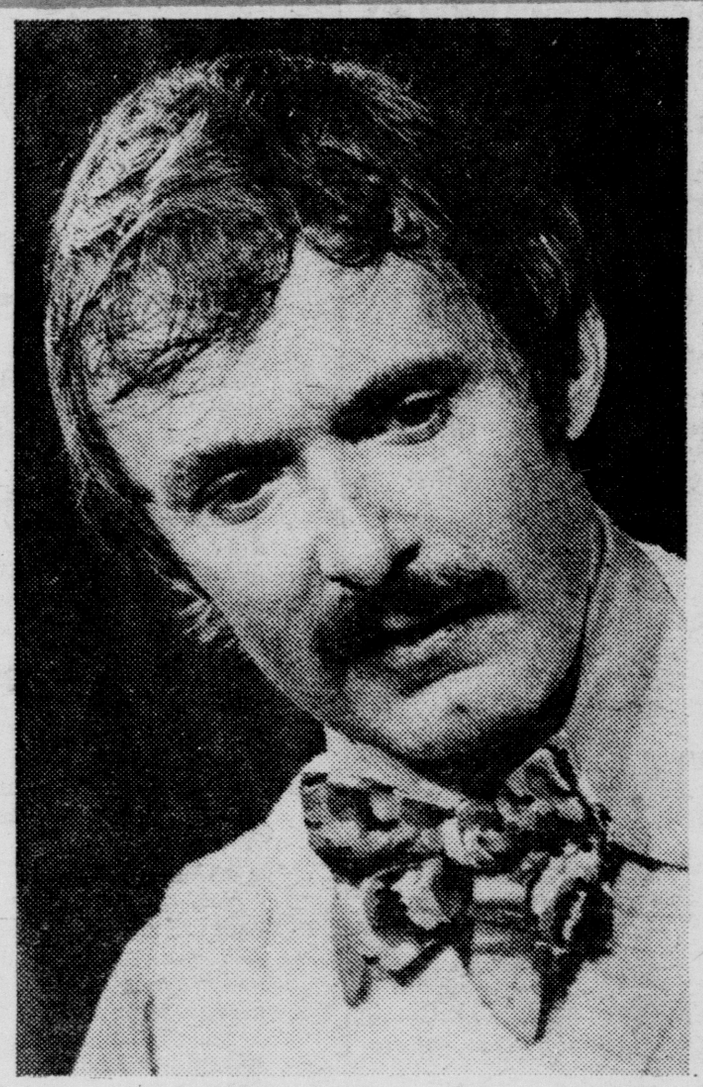

A GRADUATE of the University of Missouri with a degree in television writing, Jackson learned to make and operate puppets while serving in the armed forces. He has hosted a series of children's show including "Clown Alley," "Here Comes Freckles" and "Cartoon Town."

"I get tired of TV putting children's shows in the back of the bus. Very little emphasis is put on producing children's programs," he said.

Jackson has won praise from television critics but notes that "I've had to sell every show I ever got. Nobody was ever breaking down my door.

"I'M SURPRISED I'm still working, because everything went to cartoons and reruns of Gilligan's Island," he said. Jackson is "less than enthralled" with children's programs in general.

Speed Racer is one of the worst going. It's full of fast action, but unfortunately it's primarily violent action. Every answer is physical — the way to decide who is right is to see who can hit the hardest," he said.

BILL JACKSON

"I like solutions something other than 'I can beat him up so I'm right,' " he added.

THE GIGGLESNORT shows are devoid of violence, but Jackson said he doesn't do "goody goody shows." He said he finds some children's programs a "little too light — there's not enough meat and potatoes."

Jackson patterns his characters after "people I know, people I think I know and people I would like to know." His puppets find themselves in situations similar to real life counterparts.

One show — about the hotel residents' reactions to a green-skinned visitor — explores the subject of prejudice.

"THE ENTIRE hotel is turned off by his color. They boycott the hotel and form an exclusive club — Greens Gotta Go — the GGG," Jackson said.

Quality shows are Jackson's main concern, and he will reshoot a scene repeatedly until he is satisfied with the results. His interest in the program has apparently won him a wide following among children.

"Once when we moved into a new neighborhood, we had kids sneaking into the packing boxes. Even now, I get the feeling someone is charging 50 cents for a tour of my home," he said.

Linda Kaye Hennings

Is Linda Kaye Hennings, of "Rhyme and Reason," married to the man who played her husband on the series "Petticoat Junction"? H.N.

Yup. Mike Minor, who played Steve Elliott on that series, got married to Linda (who played Betty Jo) on Sept. 7, 1968, following a romance that began on the set. A year before their real-life wedding, they got married on the TV series.

Could you please give me some background information on Randolph Mantooth, of NBC's series "Emergency!" Also, print a picture of him and tell me where to write to him. O.F.

Randolph Mantooth, whose Indian-sounding name comes from his father (a full-blooded Seminole), attended 17 high schools and lived in 48 states. His father, you see, had a construction job which took his family all over the country. Randolph began acting in high school, but he never intended on becoming a professional actor. However, after appearing in several productions, he soon felt that acting was a natural for him and he just continued in that field. After attending City College in Santa Barbara and the University of California, Randolph was accepted at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts in New York.

Randolph Mantooth

While performing in a play at that school during his senior year, Universal's East Coast talent head saw him and signed him to an exclusive contract. Since that time, Randolph has been working in show business constantly.

TV TIME-LINE

Dick Van Dyke will star in a variety hour for NBC next season, try-out for a possible weekly series. He'll also star in a two-hour World Premiere drama concerning alcoholism, the same theme of ABC's "The Morning After," shown last season.

"The Night the Martians Landed" is the title of an ABC movie next season, a dramatized version of the October 30, 1938 radio play by Orsen Welles ("The War of the Worlds") and the public hysteria it created in some places. Stage actor Paul Shenar will portray Welles, Tom Bosley will portray a distraught network executive.

PERSONALITY POTPOURRI: PAUL NEWMAN's son, Scott, makes his TV debut as a guest star in an episode of "S.W.A.T." next season....HELEN REDDY, "Midnight Special" host and Grammy Award winner, has been set for her first concert tour in Japan this fall.

Franklin cited by post office

A philatelic cancellation and a souvenir envelope have been authorized by the U. S. Postal service to mark the opening of the B. Free Franklin Post Office in Philadelphia as part of the Franklin Court Complex.

Benjamin Franklin was appointed Postmaster General by the Continental Congress July 26, 1775. As far as can be determined the use of the word 'Free' between the first initial and the surname was uniquely a Franklin technique. It is generally assumed that Franklin, in using this technique, was making a patriotic reference to the American struggle for freedom.

Collectors desiring the cancellation should send self-addressed, stamped envelopes to "B. Free Franklin Cancel, Postmaster, Philadelphia, PA 19101." There is no charge for this service.

The souvenir envelope being offered features a pen and ink drawing of Franklin on a 10-cent Liberty Bell stamped envelope. They are cancelled with the B. Free Franklin postmark.

Envelopes are 35 cents each or three for $1 and requests should be sent to "Franklin Souvenir Envelope, Postmaster, Philadelphia, PA 19101." A self-addressed, stamped envelope must be enclosed with your order.

Stamp notes
by Bernadine M. Rechner

THE NORTHWEST Stamp Club will emphasize youth and their part in the stamp world at its meeting at 7:30 p.m. Tuesday at the Arlington Heights Public Library, 500 E. Dunton St.

Also on the agenda is the slating of officers for 1976 in preparation for the September election.

Visitors are welcome.

THE FRANKLIN D. Roosevelt (FDR) Philatelic Society will mark the 30th anniversary of V-J (Victory over Japan) Day Sept. 2 with a two-color cachet featuring the Battleship Missouri where the articles of surrender were signed.

Covers are $1 each from the "FDR Philatelic Society, P.O. Box 150-VJ, Clinton Corners, NY 12514." Please enclose a self-addressed, stamped, long envelope for their return.

Address your questions in care of this column to Paddock Publications, P. O. Box 280, Arlington Heights, Ill. 60006.

25-cent piece has drummer boy

WASHINGTON (UPI) — A revolutionary drummer boy replaces the American eagle on the back of the bicentennial commemorative 25-cent piece beginning Aug. 18.

George Washington is unchanged on the face of the coin which will have the dates 1776-1976 below the head.

The quarter is the second of three coins issued for the bicentennial. The half-dollar was issued a month ago, and a new version of the Eisenhower dollar will come out in mid-October.

The half-dollar has the Kennedy head on the front and Philadelphia's Independence Hall on the back. The dollar will have Dwight D. Eisenhower's picture on the front and the Liberty Bell superimposed on the face of the moon on the back.

Mrs. Mary Brooks, director of the mint, scheduled a public ceremony today at the Chicago Federal Building Plaza in Chicago to mark the issuance of the quarter which will be distributed to commercial banks next week and be in use Aug. 18 and thereafter.

Shelby Lyman on chess

Pins—down to the guts of the game

Pins constitute a substantial share of the sinew and bones of chess games. They come and go, as it were. But sometimes they are more easily made than broken.

When a pin looks decisive, it may indeed be decisive. Like the wrestling tactic of the same name, it will spell "finis."

In the 1948 world championship tournament, champion-to-be Michael Botvinnik (white) was nevertheless losing the following game to Sammy Reshevsky (see Diagram 1).

There are two pins in effect here and two consequent jumbles of white pieces (along the queen file and along black's QR3-KB8 diagonal).

Botvinnik, who is running out of moves, fatalistically played 1. K-K1 (removing a vital protector of the pinned bishop). This move instantly lost material to Reshevsky's 1 . . . N-N6 (either the rook or bishop will fall) and the game soon ended.

In the April Lone Pine Tournament (1975), too, there were a number of notable pins.

One of these occurred in the game Tarjan-Thornally. See (Diagram 2). White is a pawn ahead and has an effective pin of the black rook on the KN3-Q3 diagonal.

The simple 1. R(7)-R5 was decisive. The liquidation of the black rook will mean the win of another pawn. Thornally resigned, the pin pileup having put an end to the contest.

Perhaps the finest and most original exploitation of the pin idea in a very long time occurred in the game Grefe-Rohde. Here (Diagram 3) the 15-year-old Rohde beautifully surprised his famous U.S. champion opponent.

He played 1 . . . P-N4!! and after 2. PxP, N-B5!; 3. PxN, PxP! the white bishop is not only under attack but also shut out from the crucial KN5 square. The black knight will land there with a vengeance, and the additional attack on the white knight will cause a blowout of the white position.

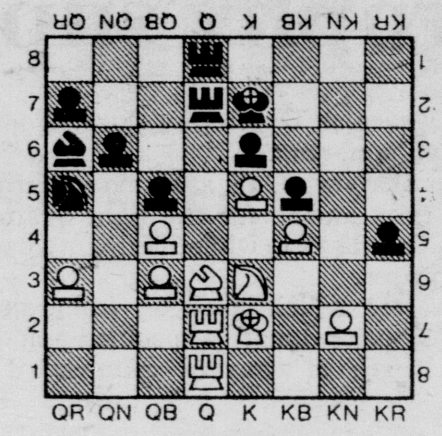

The game proceeded, 4. B-B5, NxP; 5. R-Q3, KR-Q1; 6. QR-Q1 (Diagram 4) and Rohde regained material to spare with 6 . . . NxN check; 7. RxN, BxN; etc.

A sudden and elegant finish.

He must win material

Win at bridge

by Oswald and James Jacoby

A rare squeeze well done

Probably the most elegant of all squeezes is the criss-cross. It doesn't come up too often, but when it does it is a thing of beauty.

North may have overbid a trifle when he bid four and five notrump, or maybe South shouldn't have jumped to seven. In any event the average bridge player would be unable to work out the 13th trick, since East was sitting high in back of dummy with all the clubs and diamonds.

The late Charles Lochridge, who played this hand some 35 years ago, had no trouble with it.

He won the heart and promptly cashed four trumps. East discarded a club and a heart. Then Charley led the second high heart. He chucked a diamond from dummy and East chucked a diamond right in back.

By this time Charley was so sure that East was sitting with three diamonds and four clubs that he led a fifth trump, discarded dummy's last low diamond and showed his hand.

He explained that if East threw another diamond, he would cash dummy's ace-kings of both minor suits, criss-cross back to his hand by ruffing a club and make the last trick with his eight of diamonds.

Muscular Dystrophy super skate set

The Randhurst Twin Ice Arena will sponsor a super skate to raise money for the Muscular Dystrophy Assn. from 3:15 to 9:15 p.m. Aug. 17.

Ice skaters of all ages may participate and raise money for the fight against the crippling disease, while having a chance to win prizes.

Skaters solicit pledges from sponsors who agree to donate a specified amount for the length of time or number of miles skated. All contributions are tax deductible.

Skaters collecting the most money can win a 10-speed racing bicycle, a stereo record player, a Panasonic AM-FM digital clock radio or T-shirts. Everyone who turns in their sponsor forms and money will receive a coupon for a free six-pack of 7-Up.

Anyone wishing to participate can obtain information and sponsor forms at the ice arena daily from 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. The areana is at the southeast corner of the Randhurst Shopping Center, Mount Prospect.

Lakefront Festival begins Aug. 16

Chicago's Lakefront Festival will begin at 1 p.m. Aug. 16 with the King Neptune Parade down State Street and floats commemorating the 200th birthday of the U.S.

Most of the festival events, which will continue through Aug. 24, will be held along the shore of Lake Michigan or on the Chicago River.

Major events include a fireworks display at Olive Park near Ohio Street and North Lake Shore Drive at 8:45 p.m. Aug. 16; outboard racing championships from noon until 5 p.m. Aug. 17; the Aerial Thrill Show between noon and 3 p.m. at the Civic Center Plaza Aug. 18; and a performance by the Israeli National Water Ski team on the Chicago River at Marina City at noon Aug. 18.

Admission to the festival is free.

Chess champs play 30 at one time for charity

A chess expert will play up to 30 challengers at one time in chess exhibitions Aug. 15 and 22 at the Old Orchard Bank in Skokie.

Challengers can compete from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. or 5 to 8 p.m. The chess experts have won championships in state and national contests for several years. They have been given the expert classification by the U.S. Chess Federation and the International Chess Federation.

Entrance fee for challengers is 200 pennies. The exhibitions are part of the bank's Penny Retrieval Program conducted in cooperation with the U.S. Mint. All entrance fees will be donated to the Orchard Association for the Retarded — Orchard Village and the Skokie Valley Community Hospital.

Players who defeat an expert will be awarded a boxed paperback set of Carl Sandburg's "Abraham Lincoln" as a prize.

Cat lovers care, health event set for Sunday

Cat fanciers are invited to the third Cat Care and Health Symposium sponsored by the University of Illinois College of Veterinary Medicine Sunday at the Holiday Inn, Harvey.

Speaking at the symposium will be veterinarians Dr. Fredrick W. Scott, Dr. Lloyd Helper, Dr. Donald R. Collins and Dr. Joseph Farkas. They will speak on viral diseases in cats, cat diets, the veterinarian-cat fancier relationship, breeding and diseases of the cat eye. Closing out the day-long program will be a panel discussion with the speakers and cat breeders.

The program, at the hotel on Halstead Avenue near the Interstates 80 and 294, starts at 8:30 a.m. Registration fee is $15 and includes lunch and program materials.
